PREFACE

When I began this project, there were two recent full-length monographs devoted to the study of the Arameans: P.-E. Dion, Les Araméens à l'âge du fer: Histoire politique et structures sociales (Paris: Gabalda, 1997); and E. Lipiński, The Aramaeans: Their Ancient History, Culture, Religion (Leuven: Peeters, 2000). Both of these works were devoted more or less to all aspects of the study of this people group (history, culture, religion, etc.).

Archaeological discoveries have brought much new information to light. New discoveries and advances in the understanding of the Middle Assyrian and Luwian text sources, and, to a lesser extent, the archaeology connected to these, have greatly improved our comprehension of the history of the Arameans. Various excavations have brought clarity to some of the crucial questions. Renewed excavations of long-known sites (e.g., Zincirli, Tell Ta'yinat, Tell Halaf, Tell Fakhariya) and the publication of materials found at excavated sites since the two monographs mentioned above have all contributed to a much richer knowledge. Recent anthropological studies in tribal structures and in nomadism, including important archaeological work at Jebel Bišri, have created more nuanced perspectives.

Consequently, this volume is devoted only to the political history of the Aramean entities, in so far as such is possible. The nature of the sources, whether textual or archaeological, make such a project quite challenging yet highly rewarding. There is much that we still do not know, but what we do know generates an exciting new synthesis. The impacts of all the Aramean tribal entities on the history of the ancient Near East cannot be overestimated.

A great boon to the writing of this volume was the wonderful opportunity to hold the Seymour Gitin Distinguished Professorship at the W. F. Albright Institute of Archaeological Research in 2012–13. This led to an initial draft of the manuscript. I must also voice my deepest appreciation to Trinity Evangelical Divinity School's generous sabbatical policy, which led to this volume's production.

It is impossible to write a study of this sort without the support of numerous scholars, some of whom I know only through their important scholarly publications. While it is impossible to thank everyone here, I have received over the years very particular help and encouragement from the following: B. T. Arnold, P. Bordreuil, P.-E. Dion, F. M. Fales, S. Fassberg, D. E. Fleming, S. Gitin, T. P. Harrison, J. D. Hawkins, R. S. Hess, S. W. Holloway, W. G. Lambert, A. Lemaire, J. Llop-Raduà, D. Pardee, J. D. Schloen, B. B. Schmidt, W. M. Schniedewind, J.-A. Scurlock, A. G. Vaughn, and A. R. Millard, to whom this volume is dedicated.

I must also express my deep thanks and appreciation to B. J. Collins and Bob Buller, who have been both patient and helpful at every turn in the production of this volume. Special thanks go to three of my students: A. D. Riddle (who graciously and adeptly created the maps for this volume), S. W. Booth (who brought many archaeological and bibliographic data to my attention), and N. A. Huddleston (who helped me with indexing and other proofreading issues). Any errors lie solely with me.

Finally, in every way I must give thanks to my wife, Patti. Without her innumerable, great sacrifices and support, this work could never have come to completion.
