Acknowledgments

This book would not have been completed without contributions from a variety of people. First and foremost, I am unspeakably grateful to my wife, Naomi O'Reilly, for graciously encouraging and supporting me throughout the duration of this project. She self-sacrificially carried more than her share of family responsibilities during the many, many hours that I was engaged in research and writing. Without her steadfast encouragement and commitment, this book would not have reached publication. I dedicate it with love to her.

Words cannot adequately express my gratitude to Andrew T. Lincoln for his outstanding support of this project. He was always attentive both to the big picture and to the smallest detail. Without his guidance, this book would not have taken its present shape. I am likewise indebted to Ben Witherington for his support. His input was of inestimable value. He has been a mentor to me for more than a decade, and I cannot express the extent of my appreciation for the many kindnesses he has extended.

Philip Esler and Stephen Barton also gave the manuscript a thorough reading and offered incisive feedback that helped to strengthen it for publication. Though I do not know their names, I am indebted to the anonymous reviewers who read the manuscript and recommended it for publication. Their feedback was encouraging and, once again, served to buttress the overall argument. I offer my thanks to others who sacrificed time and energy to read portions of this study and provide useful comment. They include Gary Cockerill, Dean Flemming, and Carl Sweatman. I am also indebted to the members of the Saint Peter Fellowship of the Center for Pastor Theologians who read and offered constructive feedback on several chapters at a number of our fellowship gatherings. Others were kind to engage in conversation on various aspects of my research along the way including Adrian Long, Michael Halcomb, and Fredrick Long. Through the duration of this project, Jay Arnold encouraged me to pursue excellence in my research and challenged me to continually clarify and refine my thinking and writing. For his friendship and encouragement, I am exceedingly grateful.

It would have been altogether impossible to conduct this study without the cutting-edge research support provided by the excellent staff of the Information Commons and the B. L. Fisher Library at Asbury Theological Seminary. They are to be commended. I am grateful to the many members of my family who offered their encouragement and support. I am also grateful to the people of the churches I served during the research and writing of this book for allowing me to devote necessary time to study while also serving as their pastor.

The team at SBL Press is to be commended for the professionalism with which they have executed the publication of this volume. In his role as series editor, Vernon Robbins has wisely guided me through the process of preparing the book for publication. Nicole L. Tilford lent her judicious editorial eye to the manuscript and advanced it toward publication with grace and efficiency. Heather McMurray has been diligent and professional in her work on sales and marketing. I am deeply grateful to all of them. The shortcomings that remain are, of course, my responsibility.
