PAUL THE MARTYR
PAUL THE MARTYR
The Cult of the Apostle in the Latin West
PAUL THE MARTYR

THE CULT OF THE APOSTLE IN THE LATIN WEST

By

David L. Eastman

Society of Biblical Literature
Atlanta
PAUL THE MARTYR
The Cult of the Apostle in the Latin West

Copyright © 2011 by the Society of Biblical Literature

All rights reserved. No part of this work may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying and recording, or by means of any information storage or retrieval system, except as may be expressly permitted by the 1976 Copyright Act or in writing from the publisher. Requests for permission should be addressed in writing to the Rights and Permissions Office, Society of Biblical Literature, 825 Houston Mill Road, Atlanta, GA 30329 USA.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Eastman, David L.
Paul the martyr : the cult of the apostle in the latin west / by David L. Eastman.
p. cm. — (Society of Biblical Literature. Writings from the Greco-Roman World. Supplements ; 4)
Includes bibliographical references and index.
1. Paul, the Apostle, Saint—Cult—Rome. I. Title.
BS2506.3.E27 2011
225.9'2—dc22 2011000223

19 18 17 16 15 14 13 12 11 5 4 3 2 1
Contents

Acknowledgments ........................................................................................................ vii
Abbreviations ........................................................................................................... ix
Figures .................................................................................................................... xix
Introduction ............................................................................................................ 1

Part 1: The Cult of Paul in Rome

1. The Cult of Paul on the Ostian Road ............................................................... 15
2. The Cult of Paul on the Appian Road .............................................................. 71

Part 2: The Expansion of the Cult outside Rome

3. The Spread of the Pauline Cult in Latin Europe ........................................... 117
4. The Pauline Cult in North Africa ................................................................. 155

Conclusion ........................................................................................................... 187

Bibliography ........................................................................................................ 189
Scriptural Citations ............................................................................................. 225
Primary Source Citations ................................................................................... 226
Subject Index ....................................................................................................... 227
Acknowledgments

Writing this book has been possible only because of the generous support of my family and many other people in my life. First and foremost, I wish to thank my wife, Natalie, who has been a constant source of encouragement throughout this process and a wonderful companion on the many adventures that research travel can bring.

My research has been greatly aided by the feedback of a number of colleagues. Bentley Layton, Stephen Davis, Robert S. Nelson, Harold Attridge, and John Matthews read this manuscript in dissertation form and offered insightful critiques that sparked my thinking in fruitful directions as I began revisions. John T. Fitzgerald has done exemplary work as the editor of this volume, always prompting greater clarity in the development of my arguments. A number of other colleagues have read portions of this manuscript or have brought to my attention important comparative materials, including Candida Moss, Nicola Camerlenghi, Ryan Stokes, Brent Nongbri, Timothy Luckritz Marquis, Paul Dilley, Tudor Sala, Michael Peppard, Joshua Garroway, Jeremy Hultin, Joshua Burns, Adela Yarbro Collins, Dale Martin, Robert Gregg, Raymond Van Dam, Danny Praet, Robin Jensen, Marcia Colish, Kevin Wilkinson, and Wolfgang Wischmeyer. I am also indebted to the many great teacher-scholars who have invested in me and fueled my enthusiasm for historical exploration, especially Timothy Gregory, Paul Magdalino, Ruth Macrides, Jean-Pierre Arrignon, and Helmut Koester.

Special assistance during my research in Rome was provided by Giorgio Filippi, Director of Excavations at the Basilica of St. Paul Outside the Walls, who has graciously allowed me access to photographs and other materials related to his ongoing research at the basilica. Umberto Utro, Curator of the Museo Pio Cristiano of the Vatican Museums, spent an afternoon discussing with me the museum’s rich collection of sarcophagi and has since provided me with other research support. Financial support for research travel came from Yale University, the Stavros S. Niarchos Research Fellowship, and the Berkeley, Biddle, and Woolsey Travel Fellowship of the Yale Department of Classics.
Finally, I wish to extend sincere thanks to my parents, John and Beulah Eastman. Over the years they have made numerous sacrifices—too many to count, in fact—to enable me to pursue my academic dreams. This book is dedicated to them.
ABBREVIATIONS

PRIMARY SOURCES

1 Apol. Justin Martyr, Apologia I
1 Clem. 1 Clement (Πρὸς Κορινθίους)
Act. apost. Arator, De actibus apostolorum
Acta Cypr. Acta Cypriani
Acta Phil. Acta Phileae
Acta Thom. Acta Thomae
Adv. Donat. Optatus of Milev, Adversus Donatistas
Adv. Jud. Tertullian, Adversus Judaeos
Aen. Virgil, Aeneid
Ann. Tacitus, Annales
Apol. Tertullian, Apologeticus
Apos. Con. Constitutiones apostolicae
Bibl. hist. Diodorus of Sicily, Bibliotheca historica
Brev. vit. Seneca, De brevitate vitae (Epistulae morales)
C. Const. Hilary of Poitiers, Liber contra Constantium
C. Galil. Julian, Contra Galileos
C. litt. Petil. Augustine of Hippo, Contra litteras Petiliani
Carm. Carmina (various authors)
Catech. Cyril of Jerusalem, Catecheses
Chron. Jerome, Chronicon
Cod. Theod. Codex Theodosianus
Comm. Ezech. Jerome, Commentariorum in Ezechiel libri XVI
Comm. Gal. Jerome, Commentariorum in Epistulam ad Gataetas
Conf. Augustine of Hippo, Confessionum libri XIII
Cur. Augustine of Hippo, De cura pro mortuis gerenda

-ix-
Dep. mart. Depositio martyrum
Dial. Sulpicius Severus, Dialogi
Div. Cicero, De divinatione
Ep. Epistulæ (various authors)
Ep. Tars. Pseudo-Ignatius, Epistula ad Tarsenses
Ep. Tra. Pliny the Younger, Epistulæ ad Trajanum
Epigr. Epigrammata (various authors)
Epit. chron. Prosper of Aquitaine, Epitoma chronicon
Exc. Ambrose of Milan, De excessu fratris sui Satyri
Fast. Ovid, Fasti
Flod. hist. rem. eccl. Flodard of Reims, Flodoardi historia remensis ecclesiae
Fr. hist. Hilary of Poitiers, Fragmenta historica
FSI Fonti per la storia d'Italia
Geogr. Strabo, Geographica
Glor. mart. Gregory of Tours, De gloria martyrum
Glor. martyr. Pseudo-Cyprian, De gloria martyrii
Goth. Procopius of Caesarea, Bellum gothicum
Haer. Irenaeus of Lyon, Adversus haereses
Herm. Vis. Shepherd of Hermas, Vision(s)
Hist. eccl. Historia ecclesiastica (various authors)
Hist. franc. Gregory of Tours, Historia francorum
Hist. persec. Victor of Vita, Historia persecutionis Africanae provinciae
Hist. Rom. Velleius Paterculus, Historiae Romanae
Hom. Homiliae (various authors)
Hom. Eph. John Chrysostom, Homiliae in epistulam ad Ephesios
Hom. Gen. John Chrysostom, Homiliae in Genesim
Hom. Rom. John Chrysostom, Homiliae in epistulam ad Romanos
Hymn. Ambrose of Milan, Hymni
Ign. Rom. Ignatius of Antioch, To the Romans
Itiner. Egeria, Itinerarium
Jud. gent. John Chrysostom, Contra Judaeos et gentiles quod Christus sit deus
Laud. Paul. John Chrysostom, De laudibus sancti Pauli apostoli
Laud. sanct. Victriicius of Rouen, De laude sanctorum
Leg. Cicero, De legibus
Lib. pontif. Liber pontificalis
Loc. sanct. De locis sanctis martyrum quae sunt foris civitatis Romae
Luct. Lucian of Samosata, De luctu
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Abbreviations</th>
<th>Full Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mart.</td>
<td>John Chrysostom, Homilia in martyres</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mart. Ascen. Isa.</td>
<td>Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mart. Hier.</td>
<td>Martyrologium Hieronymianum</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mart. Ign.</td>
<td>Martyrium Ignatii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mart. Perp. Felic.</td>
<td>Martyrium Perpetuae et Felicitatis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mart. Pol.</td>
<td>Martyrium Polycarpi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mirabil.</td>
<td>Mirabiliana</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mirac. Anast.</td>
<td>Miraculum sancti Anastasii martyr</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mirac. Theclae</td>
<td>Basil of Seleucia, Miracula Theclae</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mort.</td>
<td>Lactantius, De mortibus persecutorum</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nero</td>
<td>Suetonius, Vita neronis (De vita caesareum)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oboed.</td>
<td>Augustine of Hippo, De oboedientia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Or. 4 (C. Jul.)</td>
<td>Gregory of Nazianzus, Oratio 4 (Contra Julianum)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pass. Paul.</td>
<td>Passio sancti Pauli apostoli</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pass. Sebast.</td>
<td>Passio Sebastiani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paul. ep. comm.</td>
<td>Theodore of Cyrus, In quatuordecim sancti Pauli epistolas commentarius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perist.</td>
<td>Prudentius, Peristephanon (De coronis martyrum)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Praescr.</td>
<td>Tertullian, De præscriptione haereticorum</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profut.</td>
<td>Vigilii of Rome, Epistula Vigilii papae ad Profuturum episcopum</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Relat.</td>
<td>Symmachus, Relationes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rom.</td>
<td>Plutarch, Vita Romuli (Vitae parallelae)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sacrum. Leon.</td>
<td>Sacramentarium Leonianum (Sacramentarium Veronense)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sanct. Maxim.</td>
<td>Faustus of Riez, De sancte Maxime</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scorp.</td>
<td>Tertullian, Scorpiace</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Serm.</td>
<td>Sermones (various authors)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Temp. rat.</td>
<td>Bede, De temporum ratione (Chronica maiora)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theoph.</td>
<td>Eusebius of Caesarea, Theophania</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tract. Ps.</td>
<td>Jerome, Tractatus sive homiliae in psalms</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Urb. cond.</td>
<td>Livy, Ab urbe condita</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vero Aug.</td>
<td>Marcus Cornelius Fronto, Vero Augusto Domino meo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vigil.</td>
<td>Jerome, Adversus Vigilantium</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vir. ill.</td>
<td>Jerome, De viris illustribus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Virginit.</td>
<td>Ambrose of Milan, De virginitate</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Description</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------</td>
<td>-------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. Ambr.</td>
<td>Paulinus of Milan, Vita Ambrosii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. Apoll.</td>
<td>Philostratus, Vita Apollonii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. Const.</td>
<td>Eusebius of Caesarea, Vita Constantini</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. Cypr.</td>
<td>Pontius of Carthage, Vita Cypriani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. Epiph.</td>
<td>Vita sancti Epiphanii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. Fulg.</td>
<td>Ferrandus of Carthage, Vita sancti Fulgentii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. Leon.</td>
<td>Vita sancti Leonis papae</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. Mart.</td>
<td>Vita Martini (various authors)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. Maxim.</td>
<td>Dinamius Patricius, Vita Maximi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. patrum</td>
<td>Gregory of Tours, Vita patrum</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. patrum Iur. Eug.</td>
<td>Vita patrum Iurensium (Eugendii)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vit. sanct. Mart.</td>
<td>Sulpicius Severus, Vita sancti Martini</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Secondary Sources

- AASS
  Acta sanctorum quotquot toto orbe coluntur. 68 vols.
  Antwerp and Brussels: Societé des Bollandistes, 1643–1940.

- AcAr
  Acta archaeologica (Copenhagen)

- AcBer
  Acta Bernensia

- ACW
  Ancient Christian Writers

- AEAA
  Archivo Español de Arte y Arqueología

- AEAr
  Archivo Español de Arqueología

- AevumAnt
  Aevum Antiquum

- AJRG
  Archiv für Religionsgeschichte

- AJA
  American Journal of Archaeology

- AJP
  American Journal of Philology

- AJT
  American Journal of Theology

- AKG
  Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte

- AlOm.A
  Alpha-Omega. Lexika, Indizes, Konkordanzen zur klassischen Philologie. Reihe A

- Ambr
  Ambrosius

- AMidi
  Annales du Midi

- AnBib
  Analecta Biblica

- AnBoll
  Analecta Bollandiana

- ANRW
  Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt: Geschichte und Kultur Roms im Spiegel der neueren Forschung.

- AnTard
  Antiquité tardive

- APARA.D
  Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, Dissertazioni
ABBREVIATIONS

APARA.R Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, Rendiconti
ARID Analecta Romana Instituti Danici
ArtB The Art Bulletin
ASEs Annali di storia dell'esegesi
Aug Augustinianum
AUU.HR Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis. Historia Religionum
BA Biblical Archaeologist
BAA Bulletin d’Archéologie algérienne
BAC Biblioteca de autores cristianos
BAH Bibliothèque archéologique et historique. Institut français d'archéologie de Beyrouth
BAnT Bibliothèque de l'Antiquité tardive
BARC Bollettino di Archeologia Cristiana
BARIS British Archaeological Reports International Series
BBR Bulletin for Biblical Research
BEFAR Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome
BEHEc Bibliothèque de l'enseignement de l'histoire ecclésiastique
BEL.H Bibliotheca “Ephemerides liturgicae.” Sectio historica
BETL Bibliotheca ephemeridum theologicarum Lovaniensium
BHBB Biblioteca histórica de la Biblioteca Balmes
BibS(F) Biblische Studien (Freiburg)
BMusPont Bollettino dei Monumenti, Musei e Gallerie Pontificie
BRAH Boletín de la Real Academia de la Historia
BTGran Biblioteca teológica Granadina
BWeid Bibliotheca Weidmanniana
BZNW Beihefte zur Zeitschrift für die neustamentliche Wissenschaft
CACat Collezione “Amici delle catacombe”
Car Cahiers archéologiques
CArch Christliche Archäologie
CatRI Catacombe di Roma e d’Italia
CCSA Corpus Christianorum. Series Apocryphorum
CCSL Corpus Christianorum. Series latina
CCommChr Cahiers de Communauté chrétienne
CEFR Collection de l’École française de Rome
CIL Corpus inscriptionum Latinarum. Berlin: Akademie der Wissenschaften, 1863–.
CMSBAV  Catalogo del Museo sacro della Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana
CP  Classical Philology
CRAI  Comptes rendus de l'Académie des inscriptions et belles-lettres
CrArte  Critica d’Arte
CROI  Le chiese di Roma illustrate
CSEL  Corpus scriptorum ecclesiasticorum latinorum
CUFr  Collection des universités de France
CUFr.L  Collection des universités de France. Série latine
EBib  Études bibliques
EC  Early Christianity
ECF  The Early Church Fathers
EHS.A  Europäische Hochschulschriften. Reihe 38, Archäologie
EHS.K  Europäische Hochschulschriften. Reihe 28, Kunstgeschichte
EMEur  Early Medieval Europe
Epig  Epigraphica
Epros  Études prosopographiques
EUJaca  Edizioni Universitarie Jaca
FC  Fathers of the Church
FKDG  Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte
FoiVie  Foi et Vie
FontC  Fontes christiani
HAnt  Hispania Antigua
HNT  Handbuch zum Neuen Testament
HRF  Histoire religieuse de la France
HTR  Harvard Theological Review
HTS  Harvard Theological Studies
ICC  International Critical Commentary

Int  Interpretation

IP  Instrumenta Patristica

ISLL  Illinois Studies in Language and Literature

ISS  Inscriptiones Sanctae Sedis

JBL  Journal of Biblical Literature

JECS  Journal of Early Christian Studies

JEH  Journal of Ecclesiastical History

JJS  Journal of Jewish Studies

JMEMS  Journal of Medieval and Early Modern Studies

JOUHS  Journal of the Oxford University History Society

JRS  Journal of Roman Studies

JSAH  Journal of the Society of Architectural Historians

JSNTSup  Journal for the Study of the New Testament Supplement Series

JTS  Journal of Theological Studies

KAV  Kommentar zu den apostolischen Vätern

KLIO.BAG  KLIO: Beiträge zur alten Geschichte

LNSAS  Leicester-Nottingham Studies in Ancient Society

MAC  Monumenti dell’antichità cristiana

MD  La Maison-Dieu

MDAI(R)  Mitteilungen des Deutschen Archäologischen Instituts, Römische Abteilung

MEFR  Mélanges d’archéologie et d’histoire de l’école française de Rome

MEFRA  Mélanges de l’Ecole française de Rome, Antiquité

MGH.AA  Monumenta Germaniae Historica. Auctores antiquissimi

MGH.Ep  Monumenta Germaniae Historica. Epistolae

MIÖG  Mitteilungen des Instituts für österreichische Geschichtsforschung

MNHIR  Mededelingen van het Nederlands Instituut te Rome

MPAIBL  Mémoires présentés par divers savants à l’Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres de l’Institut de France

MST  Medieval Sources in Translation

NAWG.PHK  Nachrichten der Akademie der Wissenschaften in Göttingen. Philologisch-Historische Klasse

NBArC  NuovoBullettino di Archeologia Cristiana

NC  La Nouvelle Clio

NICNT  New International Commentary on the New Testament
NovT  Novum Testamentum
NovTSup  Supplements to Novum Testamentum
NS  new series
NSS  Nuovi Studi Storici
OCT  Oxford Classical Texts/Scriptorum classicorum bibliotheca oxoniensis
OECS  Oxford Early Christian Studies
OHM  Oxford Historical Monographs
OS  old series
PaP  Past and Present
Par.  Paradosis. Études de littérature et de théologie ancienne.
PIAUP  Publications de l’Institut d’Art et d’Archéologie de l’Université de Paris
RAfr  Revue africaine
RAr  Revue archéologique
RBén  Revue bénédictine
REAug  Revue des études augustiniennes
RechAug  Recherches augustiniennes
RED.F  Rerum ecclesiasticarum documenta. Series maior, Fontes
RevScRel  Revue des sciences religieuses
RHEF  Revue d’histoire de l’Église de France
RHPR  Revue d’Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses
RhWAW.G  Rheinisch-Westfälische Akademie der Wissenschaften: Vorträge G
RivAC  Rivista di Archeologia Cristiana
RLLTC  Recentiores: Later Latin Texts and Contexts
RQ  Römische Quartalschrift für christliche Altertumskunde und Kirchengeschichte
RQ.S  Römische Quartalschrift für christliche Altertumskunde und Kirchengeschichte. Supplement
RSCr  Roma sotterranea cristiana
RSR  Recherches de science religieuse
SAC  Studi di antichità cristiana
SAC(B)  Studi di antichità cristiane (Bologna)
SacEr  Sacris Erudiri
SAEB  Studia archaeologica (“Erma” di Bretschneider)
Figures

1.1. Apostolic cult sites in Rome
1.2. Remains of Constantinian apse with “tomb of Paul” in the background
1.3. Location of the Constantinian basilica
1.4. Plan of the Theodosian basilica
1.5. Altar of Mars showing the Lupercalia
1.6. Close-up of the “sarcophagus of Paul”
1.7. Tomb location within the Constantinian and Theodosian basilicas
1.8. \textit{Paulo apostolomart} slabs
1.9. Reconstruction of the original placement of \textit{Paulo} slabs
1.10. Sarcophagus image of the martyrdom of Paul
1.11. Leonine renovations of the tomb area
1.12. Gregorian renovations of the tomb area
1.13. The Gregorian crypt
1.14. The Gregorian restoration of the ancient sacred way
1.15. Central altar in the Basilica of St. Paul at the Three Fountains
1.16. Traditional “prison of Paul” in the Church of Santa Maria in Scala Coeli
2.1. Reconstruction of the \textit{triclia}
2.2. \textit{Triclia} graffiti to Paul and Peter
2.3. Banquet scene in the cemetery of Callistus
2.4. Gold glass image of Peter and Paul
2.5. The martyrs Peter and Paul being crowned by Christ
2.6. Plan of the Constantinian Basilica of the Apostles
2.7. Privileged burials in the floor of the Basilica of the Apostles
2.8. Gold glass fragment showing Damasus with Pastor, Peter, and Paul
3.1. The apostles on the silver reliquary of San Nazaro
3.2. Milan in the time of Ambrose
3.3. Sailing routes from Rome to Spain
3.4. Pauline cult sites in Gaul
3.5. Scene of Paul’s martyrdom on a sarcophagus from Gaul
3.6. Pauline cult sites in Spain
3.7. Berja sarcophagus showing Paul and Peter before Nero
4.1. Pauline cult sites in North Africa
4.2. Lintel from Henchir Deheb marking a “[Memorial] of the saints Peter and Paul”
4.3. Stone coffer from Aïn Abid referring to Peter and Paul
4.4. Limestone tablet from Tixter referring to “some relics of the apostle Peter and of Paul”
4.5. Limestone tablet from Carthage with mention of apostolic relics
4.6. Pilgrim’s flask with image of Paul
4.7. Privileged burials in and around the basilica at Tipasa
4.8. Mosaic from Uppenna with a list of martyrs that includes Peter and Paul
On June 28, 2007, Pope Benedict XVI proclaimed June 2008 to June 2009 the Year of Paul. This special celebration honored the two thousandth anniversary of the apostle’s traditional date of birth. The pontiff announced that the year would include “a series of liturgical, cultural and ecumenical events, as well as various pastoral and social initiatives, all inspired by Pauline spirituality.” In addition to these programmatic aspects of the year, the pope placed a strong emphasis on pilgrimage to the Basilica of St. Paul Outside the Walls in Rome: “This ‘Pauline Year’ will take place in a special way in Rome, where for 2000 years under the papal altar of this basilica, lies the tomb that according to experts and undisputed tradition has conserved the remains of the apostle Paul.” To encourage participation, the pontiff offered a special indulgence to those who made a pilgrimage to Rome to pray at the tomb. While Rome was the center of activity for the Year of Paul, the festivities were not confined to that city. The pope also encouraged Christians everywhere to follow the example of Rome: “In all parts of the world, similar initiatives can be organised in dioceses, shrines and places of worship by religious institutions, by social or educational institutes bearing the name of St Paul or inspired by his character and teaching.”1 The indulgence was equally available to those who made a pilgrimage or participated in sacred exercises anywhere else in the world “in holy places dedicated to St Paul.”2

Liturgy, pilgrimage, prayer at holy sites, the proliferation of sacred shrines to Paul, the promise of spiritual benefits—these were prominent aspects of the year-long festival in his honor. These were also important components of an ancient Pauline cult that began in the first century and grew dramatically in the fourth century. This book tells the story of this ancient cult of Paul as martyr in the Latin West.

---

THE CULTS OF MARTYRS AND SAINTS

The cult of the martyrs was one of the focal points of Christian piety in late antiquity. The basis of the cult was the belief that the martyrs (those who chose to die rather than recant their Christian faith) occupy a particularly elevated position in the spiritual hierarchy. Having voluntarily followed the example of Christ to the point of death, they reside in the presence of God and enjoy God’s special favor. Although they are physically dead, they remain alive and accessible to Christians who seek their intercession and assistance.

Many of Christianity’s most famous martyrs died during the movement’s first three centuries, when Christians were victims of various persecutions. In some cases they were attacked by mobs, but in other instances they were put to death by order of the imperial government. Within the Roman Empire, the earliest imperial persecution took place under the emperor Nero (ca. 64 C.E.), and the last and worst persecution occurred between 303 and 311 under the emperor Diocletian. The century that followed Diocletian’s death brought a dramatic change in the status of Christianity. The emperors Licinius and Constantine issued the Edict of Milan in 313, which granted religious freedom to Christians (Lactantius, Mort. 48; Eusebius, Hist. eccl. 10.5), and by the end of Constantine’s reign in 337, Christianity had become the favored religion of the Roman Empire. Finally, in 380, the emperors Theodosius I, Gratian, and Valentinian II issued the Edict of Thessaloniki, making Christianity the official religion of the empire (Cod. Theod. 16.1.2).

Legal freedom and a growing number of wealthy, influential converts allowed Christians to expand the scope of practices through which they honored the martyrs. This process was both creative and circular, for as veneration practices increased and expanded, so did the perceived extent of a martyr’s influence. All these practices, when taken together, constituted a martyr’s cult. As cults grew in popularity and exposure in this period of relative safety, Christians began also to venerate confessors (those who had professed their faith but had not died as martyrs) and others who had been considered particularly holy while alive. The distinction between these different types of holy

3. On the elevated status of martyrs—to a level that some even found problematic—see Candida R. Moss, The Other Christs: Imitating Jesus in Ancient Christian Ideologies of Martyrdom (New York: Oxford University Press, 2010), 149–72.

INTRODUCTION

people became blurred, and Christians commonly referred to all of them as saints. We therefore often speak about the “cult of the saints” rather than specifically the cult of the martyrs.5

THE NATURE OF THE EVIDENCE

The Pauline cult was composed of a number of practices through which Christians created and re-created an image of Paul as a martyr worthy of veneration.6 These practices can be grouped under four broad headings to which I will make reference throughout the book: places, stories, objects and rituals, and patronage relationships. By way of setting the context for my overall study, I will introduce these categories here accompanied by examples from other prominent saints’ cults. However, this presentation in distinct categories should not obscure the fact that many practices overlapped and interacted with each other, as we will see in the case of the Pauline cult.

5. The study of these cults has led to a substantial bibliography. I will not rehearse the entire history of scholarship here, because this has been ably done by Stephen Wilson, “Annotated Bibliography,” in Saints and Their Cults: Studies in Religious Sociology, Folklore and History (ed. Stephen Wilson; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983), 309–417; and Lucy Grig, Making Martyrs in Late Antiquity (London: Duckworth, 2004), 146–51. To these summaries I must add several important studies on the cults of particular saints. Raymond Van Dam, Saints and Their Miracles in Late Antique Gaul (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1993) is a work primarily (although not exclusively) on the cult of Martin of Tours, particularly through the lens of the writings of the sixth-century bishop Gregory of Tours. In Saint Demetrios of Thessaloniki: Civic Patron and Divine Protector, 4th–7th Centuries CE (HTS 47; Harrisburg, Pa.: Trinity Press International, 1999), James C. Skedros illustrates how text and architecture were woven together to produce a saint whose cult exerted considerable social and political influence in this Macedonian city. Finally, Stephen J. Davis’s The Cult of Saint Thecla: A Tradition of Women’s Piety in Late Antiquity (OEC5; Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001) provides an analysis of the cult of the martyred virgin in Asia Minor and Egypt. Davis integrates text, art, and archaeology into his study of women’s piety and the social practices that emerged around the Thecla cult. My own study of the Pauline cult is in part inspired by the work of Van Dam, Skedros, and Davis.

Places

The first of these practices was the designation of particular locations as holy places. Certain locations were ascribed special importance for the commemoration of the martyrs. Christians tended to favor birth places, sites of preaching or miracles, martyrdom locations, and tombs. One of the earliest recorded examples of this comes from the Martyrdom of Polycarp. Probably written in the latter half of the second century, it recounts the trial and violent death of the bishop of Smyrna in Asia Minor (modern Izmir, Turkey) between 155 and 170 C.E. After Polycarp's execution and cremation by a Roman soldier, the Christians of Smyrna collected his bones and laid them in “a suitable place” (Mart. Pol. 18.2–3). This place became the center of commemoration and veneration of the martyred bishop in the years following his death.

7. I will identify places in this book by their most recognizable names, whether those be the ancient or modern names. In each case the corresponding names will also be given in parentheses.

9. Cf. R. A. Markus, “How on Earth Could Places Become Holy? Origins of the Christian Idea of Holy Places,” JECS 2 (1994): 257–71. Markus argues that, prior to the fourth century, Christians were opposed to the notions of sacred space and sacred time. His argument does not account for texts such as the Martyrdom of Polycarp, Eusebius’s reference to the tombs of Peter and Paul around the turn of the third century, third-century liturgical calendars from both Rome and North Africa, and other evidence of popular practices that will be discussed in this book. Markus’s argument does hold true for the earliest period, however. An important example is the tomb of Jesus, which was not a place of veneration prior to the time of Constantine, as shown by Helmut Koester, “On Heroes, Tombs, and Early Christianity: An Epilogue,” in Flavius Philostratus: Heroikos (trans. Jennifer K.
In many cases, Christians marked these holy places with some kind of shrine or monument. These could be simple or elaborate, depending on the context and resources of those constructing it. In the year 384, the female pilgrim Egeria visited a shrine of the martyr Thecla on a hill just south of Seleucia (modern Silifke, Turkey). This is the traditional location of the martyr’s death, and the shrine itself was attached to a church and surrounded by a wall (Itiner. 23.2–4).

In the middle of the fifth century, the center of the local cult moved to a small church built over a cave at the foot of the hill. Soon after, the emperor Zeno constructed an enormous basilica that engulfed both the cave and the smaller church, thereby employing architecture to mark this entire area as holy space.

Stories

The production of literary accounts of a martyr’s great deeds and death was a prominent aspect of many martyr cults. Cyprian was a third-century bishop in Carthage (near modern Tunis, Tunisia). He was arrested in 258 and executed by order of the Roman consul. A deacon of Carthage named Pontius wrote the Life of Cyprian in the years immediately following the martyr’s death. In the introduction to his work, Pontius comments, “Since … it is right that [Cyprian’s] example should be recorded in writing, I have thought it appropriate to prepare this brief and concise narrative … that this incomparable and lofty pattern may be prolonged for posterity into immortal remembrance” (Vit. Cypr. 1). What follows is a flattering account of Cyprian’s life in which every decision, even in the midst of controversy, was made with infallible wisdom. His model death was preceded by a model life. Pontius was not attempting to produce an objective, historical account of Cyprian’s life and martyrdom. Rather, he was sculpting an image of the bishop that would be perpetuated by the reading and circulation of his narrative.

Berenson Maclean and Ellen Bradshaw Aitken; SBLWGRW 1; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2001), 257–64.

10. This practice was, of course, not unique to Christians. On the Jewish practice of constructing and honoring tombs of the prophets, see, e.g., Matt 23:29; Luke 11:47–48.

11. Davis, Cult of Saint Thecla, 36–39. Theodore of Mopsuestia is said to have made regular pilgrimages to Thecla’s shrine at Seleucia. According to a legend in the Chronicle of Seert, on one occasion he had a dream in which he saw Thecla alongside an old man (Paul?) who gave him fourteen keys to unlock the fourteen Pauline epistles. See John T. Fitzgerald, “Theodore of Mopsuestia on Paul’s Letter to Philemon,” in Philemon in Perspective: Interpreting a Pauline Letter (ed. D. Francois Tolmie; BZNW 169; Berlin: de Gruyter, 2010), 342–43.

12. “One might even go so far as to argue that [early Christian historians] did not simply preserve the story of persecution and martyrdom but, in fact, created it” (Elizabeth
The publishing of the alleged trial transcripts was another means of circulating stories. Texts of this type, in fact, represent a significant percentage of the surviving stories about martyrs. They often consist primarily of back-and-forth debates between determined Christians and exasperated government officials. The Acts of Phileas is a fourth-century text recounting the trial and execution of the bishop of Thmuis (Egypt). The text focuses on the futile attempts by the proconsul Culcianus to convince Phileas to offer sacrifice in honor of the emperor:

The climax of these texts is often the martyr’s bold pronouncement of unwavering faith (“I am a Christian”), even when faced with death. In some cases, these trial transcripts were later incorporated into larger narratives of the martyrs’ lives (e.g., Mart. Perp. Felic. 6).

Sermons were also a way of telling stories about a martyr. These were often given on a martyr’s “birthday,” a term Christians used for the anniversary of his or her death. Augustine is a rich source of such sermons, including several in honor of Cyprian. He opens the first of these with the following declaration:

Such a happy and religious occasion as this, on which we are celebrating the blessed martyr’s passion, requires me to pay the debt of the sermon I owe to your ears and hearts…. And now at this time we recall all that happened then by reading about it and appreciating it, not only without any sadness at all, but even with immense gladness. (Serm. 309.1, Hill)

This day had been set aside to commemorate Cyprian’s death, and Augustine proceeded to tell his own version of the events leading up to the former bishop’s martyrdom. He creatively interpreted and applied the story as moral exhortation for the audience in his basilica.

---

13. The importance of trial manuscripts is clearly seen in the extensive list of martyrdom accounts summarized by Moss, Other Christs, 177–201 (appendix).

14. There are some differences between the Latin and Greek versions of this text, but this passage appears in both surviving versions.
Stories about martyrs circulated as well through oral tradition. The particular holy places associated with martyrs provided fertile settings for visitors to hear and exchange stories. Egeria recounts that monks and other people told her stories about the places she was visiting and the holy people associated with those places (Itiner. 20.12). As with all storytelling, these interactions represented a creative process through which new elements and perspectives entered into the tradition. The images of martyrs, therefore, were constantly in flux, being shaped and reshaped by those telling stories about their lives and deaths.

Objects and Rituals

The collection and veneration of relics were central to many cults. Relics were the most important physical objects for a cult, and we may distinguish them into two categories. Primary relics were the martyr’s actual physical remains. As early as the second century, Christians were treating relics with special care. Polycarp’s cremation did not deter the local Christians from gathering the bones for special veneration: “Thus we later took up his bones, which are more valuable than precious stones and more refined than gold” (Mart. Pol. 18.2). Even pieces of bone were desirable, for “wherever a drop of dew has fallen on men in the shape of a particle of bone, the tiny gift from a consecrated body, holy grace has brought forth fountains in that place, and the drops of ashes have begotten rivers of life” (Paulinus of Nola, Carm. 19.359–362). Blood or other bodily fluids were also considered equal to the bones themselves. As Vincent of Saragossa lay on his death bed after being tortured, the faithful were drawn to the martyr’s open wounds: “One covers with kisses the double cuts made by the claws, another eagerly licks the red gore on the body. Many wet a linen garment with drops of blood, to lay it up at home as a holy safeguard for their descendants” (Prudentius, Perist. 5.337–344, Thomson).

Secondary relics (branda or sanctuaria) were objects that had come into contact with primary relics and then carried spiritual power that had been transferred to them. At the traditional tomb of Peter in Rome,

If someone wishes to take away a blessed relic, he weighs a little piece of cloth on a pair of scales and lowers it into [the tomb]; then he keeps vigils, fasts and earnestly prays that the power of the apostle will assist his piety. [What happens next] is extraordinary to report! If the man’s faith is strong, when the piece of cloth is raised from the tomb it will be so soaked with divine power that it will weigh much more than it weighed previously. (Gregory of Tours, Glor. mart. 27, Van Dam)
Both primary and secondary relics, even if only in fragmentary form, were seen as conduits and access points of the spiritual power that a martyr could wield. As Bishop Paulinus of Nola once wrote, “Wherever there is part of a saint’s body, there, too, his power emerges” (Paulinus of Nola, Carm. 27.445, Walsh).

Producing and procuring items bearing the name and/or image of the martyr were two related practices. Portable objects of this type were often produced and distributed as mementos of a visit to a holy place. Visitors to a shrine of the martyr Menas in Egypt could take home ceramic flasks featuring the image of Menas on one side and Thecla on the other. Some of these flasks probably contained holy oil taken from the site. Sarcophagi represent another class of object that could bear images of a martyr, particularly iconographical representations of his or her death. They were far more expensive and less mobile than ceramic flasks, but in some cases they were transported a considerable distance, as we will see in the case of Paul.

The practice of pilgrimage was adapted from Greco-Roman religions. Christians traveled to designated holy places in order to honor the saints, venerate their relics, and secure secondary relics or other mementos. Some early Christian pilgrims traveled great distances. Egeria’s journey took her from western Europe (probably Spain) as far east as Egypt and Syria. Constantine’s mother, Helena, went from Rome to Palestine in the early fourth century, where she established Christian churches at holy sites (Eusebius of Caesarea, Vit. Const. 3.42–46). Other Christians visited shrines in their own regions. According to the Miracles of St. Thecla, the residents of Seleucia and Tarsus regularly engaged in mutual pilgrimage along the Cilician coast between their sites for Thecla and Paul, respectively (Basil of Seleucia, Mirac. Theclae 4, 29).

The installation of privileged burial sites near a martyr’s tomb was linked closely to relics. Ancient Christians displayed a clear desire to be interred “near the saints” (ad sanctos). Relics were believed to carry the saint’s full power, so it was desirable to be buried as close as possible. Those lying “near the saints” would benefit at the final judgment and resurrection on account of their proximity to these special tombs. Bishop Ambrose of Milan had greater confidence in his eternal fate because he was to be buried over the bodies of the martyrs Gervasius and Protasius in a basilica that he had built: “I believe that I will be more commendable to God, because I will rest over the bones of the body of a saint” (Exc. 1.18).

His (supposed) body is visible even today in the Basilica di Sant’Ambrogio in Milan, where Ambrose is still flanked by the bodies of the two martyrs.

The celebration of annual feast days was a well-attested part of a martyr’s cult. The Martyrdom of Polycarp provides the earliest recorded example of this practice. After burying the bones of Polycarp, the Christians of Smyrna continued to commemorate the day of his death: “As we are able, we gather together there with joy and gladness, and the Lord will permit us to celebrate the birthday of his martyrdom in memory of those who have gone before and for the training and preparation of those who will do so in the future” (Mart. Pol. 18.3). They held an annual gathering on Polycarp’s “birthday” to remember his death and example, mindful that their own day of testing could be coming soon. The growth in the number of such feast days contributed to the eventual development of liturgical calendars.

A practice closely associated with feast days was the celebration of meals in honor of a martyr. These special banquets, inspired by Roman meals in honor of departed ancestors, took place at the tombs or shrines of the saints. Augustine says that his mother regularly partook in these meals in North Africa: “It had been my mother’s custom in Africa to take meal-cakes and bread and wine to the shrines of the saints on their memorial days” (Conf. 6.2, Pine-Coffin). Ambrose of Milan forbade this practice in his city. Augustine followed him in condemning it in Africa, because these unsupervised gatherings had been the occasion for immoral activity. The bishops were in a distinct minority, however, for most Christians eagerly participated in these special meals honoring the martyrs.

---

17. Ambrose was credited with having found the relics of these previously unknown martyrs (Ambrose, Ep. 22; Paulinus of Nola, Vit. Ambr. 14).

18. The other primary contributing factor to the development of liturgical calendars was the Roman civil calendar, which listed public holidays and festivals for particular deities. Natasia Donati and Patrizia Stefanetti, Dies natalis: I calendari romani e gli anniversari dei culti (Rome: Quasar, 2006); Denis Feeney, Caesar’s Calendar: Ancient Times and the Beginnings of History (Berkeley: University of California Press, 2007), 138–211.

Another practice in many cults was claiming a personal relationship with a martyr using the model and language of patronage. Patronage was a foundational concept in the social structure of the Roman world and involved an agreement between two parties of unequal standing. The more powerful patron provided favors to the less powerful client, who would render service in return. The parties involved were sometimes described as friends, suggesting more comparable standing, but in reality these relationships still frequently involved social unequals. As far as Christianity is concerned, patronage appears to have played a key role in its various social networks from the first century onward, sometimes invoking the language of both kinship and friendship. This role was maintained and even expanded within the cults of martyrs, where patronage may be seen in the association between martyrs and local bishops, particular cities, or even entire regions. Prudentius speaks of Cyprian as a patron not only for his native North Africa but also for the regions of Britain, Gaul (France), Italy, and Spain: “He has attained to the realms of heaven, yet nonetheless he moves over the earth and does not leave this world. He still discourses, still holds forth, expounding, teaching, instructing, prophesying…. Indeed he is both teacher on earth and martyr too in heaven; here he instructs men, from there as their patron gives them gifts in love” (Perist. 13.99–101, 105–106, Thomson). Cyprian had become a figure who could intercede in the heavenly realms on behalf of the faithful on earth, and in return his clients “raised up a tomb and consecrated his ashes” (13.98, Thomson).

Taken together, these practices contributed to the cult of a martyr, and this study integrates these various forms of evidence to create a thick description of the cult of the apostle Paul in late antiquity. I have limited the scope of my inquiry to Rome and the Latin West, from the earliest vestiges of the cult to the death of bishop Gregory I of Rome (604 C.E.).

The first part of the book focuses on the two primary locations in Rome where Paul was venerated as a martyr: the site of the current Basilica of St. Paul Outside the Walls on the Ostian Road, and the Catacombs of St. Sebastian on the Appian Road. The Ostian Road site had ties to Paul’s martyrdom and burial, while the Appian Road location preserves the earliest archaeological evidence of the Pauline cult. The designation of these places as holy places—or sacred spaces—led to substantial architectural and cultic development at both locations. Equally interesting are the sites outside Rome where the Pauline cult was established. The second part of the book focuses on these locations in the rest of Latin Europe and North Africa. A major theme in these chapters is the way in which the Pauline cult served to connect these other regions to Rome. Christians appropriated Roman models of sacred space and created cultic centers as a means of asserting association with—or intentional separation from—the spiritual capital of the West. In this book I will seek to demonstrate that the identification and architectural development of sacred places provided the primary framework for the Pauline cult. The complex interplay of practices that occurred in these spaces both reflected and generated popular conceptions of Paul the martyr.

23. Another expression of some cults was the practice of naming children after a particular saint. I do not discuss it at length here because I am unaware of evidence for this in the Pauline cult in the West. In Egypt, however, Christians did name their children for the apostle. See Willy Clarysse, “The Coptic Martyr Cult,” in Martyrium in Multidisciplinary Perspective (ed. M. Lamberigts and P. Van Deun; BETL 117; Leuven: Peeters, 1995), 386–87.