This volume on Theodoret of Cyrus appearing now in the series Writings from the Greco-Roman World, and others on Diodore of Tarsus and Theodore of Mopsuestia, will hopefully contribute to a greater appreciation of the way the Old Testament was read in Antioch. That, at least, is my intention and hope.

I am grateful to the General Editor of the series, John T. Fitzgerald, and to the Editorial Director of the Society of Biblical Literature, Bob Buller, for acceptance of this work. My appreciation is due also to Richard Price of Heythrop College, the University of London, for kindly acting as editor of the volume.

Introduction

I. THEODORET: HIS LIFE AND WORKS

Born about 393 in Antioch, Theodoret owed his name to grateful parents, who also had a hand in his entering monastic life at an early age. Since his famous predecessors in that school, if we may use the term,¹ John Chrysostom and Theodore of Mopsuestia—both pupils of Diodore of Tarsus—had been appointed to episcopal responsibilities, respectively, in Constantinople in 397 and in Mopsuestia in Cilicia in 392, they cannot have exercised much direct influence on Theodoret's formation. In 423 he was elected bishop of Cyrus (so named after the Persian emperor of that name), a city about 100 kilometers northeast of Antioch, perhaps "a little backwater"² yet a see with responsibility for eight hundred parishes, Theodoret tells us in his letters. Caught up in the theological turmoil of the time in the wake of the council of Constantinople of 381, he took an active part in representing the positions of the oriental bishops against those supporting Cyril of Alexandria on christological questions. His episcopal and civic duties, not to mention these theological concerns, did not prevent his writing many works of a dogmatic, apologetic and historical nature as well as commentaries on Paul's letters and most of the Old Testament, beginning with the Song of Songs about the time of the council of Ephesus in 431. He could make the claim to have produced works on "all the prophets, the psalter and the apostle” in a letter written in 448³ shortly before being deposed at the “Robber Council” of Ephesus, soon to be re-instated by Pope Leo and play a leading role in having the council of Chalcedon convened in 451. He died about 460.⁴

² The term of Frances M. Young, From Nicaea to Chalcedon. A Guide to the Literature and Its Background (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983), 267, who also concedes (268) the extent of Theodoret's pastoral responsibilities on the evidence of Ep. 113.

It is a moot point whether Theodoret’s commentary on the book of Daniel should be listed among his works on Old Testament prophecy; his own principal assertion in the work, contesting the contemporary Jewish position, was robustly in the affirmative, and helped account for the book’s continuing location in the Christian Bible among the (Latter) Prophets instead of being placed—more correctly—as a piece of apocalyptic among the Writings, as in the Hebrew Bible. For Christians, Daniel has historically been ranked among the “four (major) prophets,” and it is the σκοπός of Theodoret’s commentary to vindicate this placement by proving the book’s prophetic character—a task for which he comes inadequately prepared by the ignorance of apocalyptic which he shares with his fellow Antiochenes. Instead, he claims the authority of Jesus, the other prophets and the Jewish historian Flavius Josephus as guarantee of the status of “Daniel the prophet.”

2. CIRCUMSTANCES OF COMPOSITION OF THE COMMENTARY

It is an index both of the significance of Daniel and of the urgency of need to dispute the contrary, Jewish position on the character of the work that he comes to comment on it very early in his exegetical career (using this word loosely).⁵ He turns to it directly after his initial commentary, on the Song of Songs, probably within a year or so, in response (he claims in introducing his later Psalms commentary) to those of his flock who “were anxious to have a

Kelly, Golden Mouth: The Story of John Chrysostom: Ascetic, Preacher, Bishop (Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1995), 94: “Neither John, nor any Christian teacher for centuries to come, was properly equipped to carry out exegesis as we have come to understand it. He could not be expected to understand the nature of Old Testament writings.”

close knowledge of the man of desires”⁶ (the sobriquet for Daniel he finds in his version by Theodotion at 9:23; 10:11,23), though it is a commonplace of his—and doubtless many other authors—to cite an imaginary public clamoring for satisfaction. He begins by saying he has a double obligation to undertake the work, not only this popular demand but also the biblical injunction to teach the ignorant:⁷ “It is not only the divine law that prompts us: many illustrious acquaintances also have made earnest supplication to us and obliged us to summon up courage for this contest.”⁸

The precise date of composition is a matter of conjecture, depending on the Song commentary, which can be placed about a year before or after the council of Ephesus in 431,⁹ at which he and John of Antioch represented the oriental churches. Some interval must have elapsed between these works, one would presume on psychological grounds, considering the utter contrast in the two styles of commentary—the earlier a remarkably spiritual interpretation in the manner of Origen of a unique opus in heated opposition to the historical approach of (it seems) Theodore,¹⁰ the later by contrast a vigorous effort to force the haggadic and apocalyptic material of Daniel into just such an historical mould Theodoret had eschewed in the Song commentary. No author, no matter how flexible and “modéré,”¹¹ could easily and quickly pass from one to the other. A significant clue, it seems, is to be found

⁷ Theodoret cites Deut 4:9.

⁸ PG 81:1257.

in the commentator's repeated remarks about the pax Romana, the Roman Empire being in his (misguided) view the last of the four empires of which the book speaks. He associates it with "submission, good order and the rule of law," and sees it continuing from its inception under Augustus until the second coming: "The Roman kingdom remained in power under him, and has lasted even to this day."¹² By the time of his Psalms commentary in the mid 440s, on the contrary, he has had reason for doubts as to its untroubled continuance, following invasions in 434 by the Huns and in 441 by the Persians.¹³ A date like 433 therefore suggests itself for Theodoret's Daniel commentary.

Never forthcoming on the readership for whom he is writing in his commentaries, Theodoret does not specify it in this case, either. At one place he betrays the fact that his readers may be literate enough to access the works of Flavius Josephus which, in his historical approach to this work, he cites at some length; after quoting those works yet again on chapter eleven, he demurs: "In case I prolong the account excessively by narrating other events as well, I refer an interested reader to them." An intriguing feature of his opening commentary on chapter four of Daniel is its length, moral character and degree of scriptural documentation; after protracted development of the arrogance of Nebuchadnezzar, Theodoret concludes, "Lest in citing all the prophecies of him I prove obnoxious by their length, I shall, after referring the present listeners (ἀκούοντες) and later readers (ἐντετυζομένους) to them if they want to learn of his conceit and cruelty, return to the matter in hand."¹⁴ Is there an implication here that some of his flock in 433 are hearing this commentary directly from their bishop, while later ages will have the possibility of reading the text, as with his commentaries generally? Today's reader certainly finds this section atypically prolix and moralistic, as would be more appropriate if it appeared first in a homily.

¹³ Cf. PG 80:978. Even in the Ezekiel commentary, which followed Daniel, he reminds readers of the invasion of the Huns, which allows us to date the work to perhaps late 434.

Theodoret's overall approach to his readers, however, does not parallel that of Chrysostom in his homilies to his congregations, with whom he engages in living intercourse.¹⁵ He is scrupulous in respecting the limits of his role, being reluctant even as a pastor (we shall see) to apply the biblical text to his readers' lives; and he is likewise reluctant to comment on the society of his day. Such observations in this work, therefore, strike us as relatively more frequent: he remarks on the behavior of deranged people of his day in comment on 4:33, on taxation and widespread poverty as effects of imperial government (7:23), on titles in use in correspondence (5:10), and on the likelihood that the τακτικοί mentioned in his text at 6:2 for "supervisors" of the Persian satraps corresponds to the ὑπαρχοί more familiar to his readers.

It may also be of significance that, though the work begins with a lengthy preface, stating the commentator's principal σκοπός as vindication of Daniel's prophetic status and acknowledging the work of predecessors, it concludes only with a brief peroration and doxology such as closed the other eight τόμοι into which it was divided (for reasons of length). There is thus none of the familiar appeals to the readers to make allowances for his shortcomings and reward him with their prayers, such as we find closing his works on the Twelve and the Psalms. We did not find such a conclusion in his previous work on the Song, either, though there his significant "preface" was clearly a postscript; and this may be the case here, or he may yet have to develop the rather stylized form of conclusion.

3. TEXT OF THE COMMENTARY AND THEODORET'S BIBLICAL TEXT

As is the case with most of Theodoret's biblical commentaries, while grateful for its survival in direct manuscript tradition, we are not yet in the position of being able to read the text in a modern critical edition. The editors of Sources chrétiennes, to whom we are indebted for producing such an edition of his Isaiah commentary, are currently occupied with the Commentary on the Twelve. For the immediate future, then, the text to hand is that of J. P. Migne's Patrologia graeca deriving from the seventeenth- and eighteenth-century editions of available manuscripts. The eighteenth-century edition of J. L. Schulze reproduced in PG 81:1256–1546 details the characteristics of manuscripts from Augsburg and from Paris in particular, one of the former recommending itself to him.¹⁶

In Theodoret's Bible the book of Daniel occurs, as previously noted, among the prophets and following Ezekiel, a placement he vigorously defends. (His canon of the Old Testament, incidentally, seems to include 1–2 Esdras and 3 Maccabees, but—as with his fellow Antiochenes—not Esther.)¹⁷ The text of Daniel in front of him comprises chapters 1–12, plus verse 1 of the deuterocanonical story of Bel and the Dragon (but not Susanna). Whereas he and his fellows at Antioch are reading the Old Testament in their local Greek version, which is normally that form of the Septuagint known (Jerome tells us) as κοινὴ or “Lucianic,”¹⁸

¹⁸ Ep. 106.2 (PL 22:838). Paul Kahle, The Cairo Geniza (2nd ed.; Oxford: Blackwell, 1959), 256–57, argues that a translation distinct from that of Alexandria called the Septuagint was earlier developed in Antioch and was revised by Lucian in the third century. In the view of Sidney Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford: Clarendon, 1968), 160–61, Lucian's lack of Hebrew relegated him to the role of reviser. Natalio Fernández Marcos, on the other hand, The Septuagint in Context: Introduction to the Greek Versions of the Bible (trans. Wilfred G. E. Watson; Leiden: Brill, 2001), 54, does not accept Kahle's proposal of a number of Greek translations like the many Aramaic targums, though he refers to the LXX as a “collection of translations” (xi, 22). Kahle, The Cairo Geniza, 257, cites T. W. Manson, agreeing (on the basis of Irenaeus) that the text associated with the name Theodotion rested on an early

after the scholar-priest of Antioch who acted as translator or—more likely—reviser, in the case of the book of Daniel it is the version associated with the name of the earlier Jewish translator Theodotion that they find as their biblical text in preference to the LXX. At one place, 2:28, the text adopts a phrase found in the LXX. At another, 8:2, where Theodoret finds Theodotion retaining a transliterated Hebrew form (for “river”) in its version, “I was at the Ουβαλ,” he offers as a paraphrase “I seemed to be standing at the gate (some translators rendering it this way),” thus revealing he is aware of the LXX’s πύλη—but unaware that it is rather Hebrew ‘abul, “gate,” that the Seventy are reading, his ignorance of Hebrew being another exegetical limitation he shares with his Antiochene fellows (and, in fact, all the Fathers but Jerome and perhaps Origen).¹⁹ He is thus not in a position to remark on the unique feature of the book’s survival partly in Aramaic (despite his native familiarity with Syriac, a dialect of Aramaic),²⁰ partly in Hebrew, or to note that the Greek alone includes the prayer of Azariah and the hymn of the three (young) men as 3:24–90 not found in the Aramaic section of our Masoretic text.

There are a half-dozen individual features of this local text of his (noted below where they occur), but they are of no particular significance. In this work Theodoret is not concerned often to question the accuracy of his version; beyond checking the LXX in the above cases and at 9:24, he seeks clarification on rare occasions from other manuscripts, ἀντίγραφα.²¹ Unlike his earlier work on the Song, and later on the Psalms, here he does not look for light from the alternative versions of Aquila and Symmachus, the latter cited once only, on 1:3, where Theodotion had settled for transliterating a Persian word (though in a similar case, on 11:16, version made in Ephesus.

²⁰ Cf. Pierre Canivet, Histoire d’une entreprise apologétique au v^e siècle (Paris: Bloud & Gay, 1957), 26–27.

²¹ The verses in question are 6:3; 7:5, 25; 8:5.

he cites a version that we know from Jerome to be that of Symmachus).²² His focus is clearly not so much on textual criticism as on the “historical” references in the text and their New Testament “fulfillment” that will endorse the prophetic status of the “man of desires.” He is not inclined, either, to take refuge in textual inconsistencies or other evidence of interference with the text that suggest to modern commentators the hand of redactors. He does not consider the possibility that the prayer in 9:4–20 has been inserted, nor that the book closes with the stylized ending at 12:4, even when later editors’ additions introduce different time spans that he is in some difficulty accommodating to his factual approach.

4. THEODORET’S ΣΚΟΠός: TO ACCREDIT DANIEL AS PROPHET

Theodoret is instead clearly preoccupied with the status of this book, found in the Hebrew Bible but relegated there to the Writings, not having been listed among Torah or Prophets in the catalogue of Ben Sira 48:22–49:12 in the early second century (probably not composed by then, in fact).²³ Hence the urgency of his treating Daniel before coming next to Ezekiel, and well before his treatment of Isaiah and Jeremiah that concludes his exegetical career (apart from Paul and the Quaestiones). He is aware from the outset of the anomaly of the priority he gives to this book, addressing the matter early in the preface by citing again popular demand for commentary while also betraying that underlying concern, Jewish rejection of its prophetic status.

Firstly, it is because our friends required of us commentary on this author, and we consider it a duty to give the petitioners the favor they request. But furthermore it is the Jews’ folly and shamelessness that causes us to pass over the others for the moment and expound this author’s prophecies and make them clear, embarking as they did on such brazen behavior as to cordon off this author from the band of the prophets and strip him of the prophetic title itself.²⁴

²² Jerome, Commentariorum in Daniele [CCSL 75A; S. Hieronymi Presbyteri Opera pars 1, opera exegetica 5; Turnhout: Brepols, 1964], 910).

Theodoret honestly cannot understand how Jews can deny what should be obvious to them of all people, how they “presumed to place this divine prophet outside the prophetic corpus, despite learning by experience the truth of the prophecy.”²⁵ The other prophets cede pride of place to Daniel, he claims without documentation, “the Jews of old used call blessed Daniel the greatest prophet,” and Josephus can be quoted to the same effect; and, for a Christian, Jesus personally clinches the matter by citing “Daniel the prophet” in Matt 24:15 in reference to the end times. In fact, as we shall see, the citation in apocalyptic passages in the Gospels, the Pastorals and Revelation (mistakenly read as confirmation of Old Testament prophecy) of the apocalyptic material in Daniel (mistakenly read as prophecy) is critical to Theodoret’s defense of the book’s prophetic status. While the promotion of Daniel ahead of, say, Isaiah—“the most articulate of all the prophets,” in Chrysostom’s widely supported view²⁶—is testimony to Theodoret’s (and perhaps his peers’) sensitivity to contemporary Jewish hermeneutical positions, his failure to recognize the haggadic and apocalyptic character of this book and of similar material in the New Testament is symptomatic of flaws in their exegetical formation, which will affect their commentary on other biblical books as well.

If there is truth, then, in Theodoret’s claim that he is responding to popular demand for explication in taking on the task of commenting on Daniel, the urgent question he has to address is, What is biblical prophecy? How is one to interpret it? He begins at once by endorsing people’s experience, that the prophets do not yield to superficial reading, citing implicitly the sentiments of the familiar saw from 2 Cor 3:6, “The letter kills,”²⁷ and he makes

²⁶ Homily 2 In Oziam (PG 56:108).

a claim to a share for himself in the gift of interpretation, thanks to his betters. He proceeds straightway to pose the key question, putting it to Jewish opponents.

For us to establish their brazen behavior convincingly, let us pose this question to them: what do you claim is typical of a prophet? Perhaps your reply would be, Foreseeing and foretelling the future. Let us see, therefore, whether blessed Daniel had a foreknowledge of it and foretold it.²⁸

Theodoret has thus, as we would expect of an Antiochene exegete, adopted the concept of prospective prophecy, of the prophet as seer, of a tight relationship between prophecy and historical fulfillment, whether within the bounds of the Old Testament (a perspective Diodore and especially Theodore would prefer)²⁹ or extending to the New and beyond. And Daniel does not disappoint: the book begins by citing the “historical” data of Nebuchadnezzar’s assault on Jehoiakim’s Jerusalem: “This very feature, his mentioning the kings of the time and the dates, betrays his prophetic character, it being possible to find the other prophets doing likewise.”³⁰ The case is as good as closed.

This, then, is what prophecy is about, this is what prophets do; and the book of Daniel, with its (apocalyptic) preoccupation with empires and “times” and obscure rulers, is the prime analogue of prophecy in the view of an Antiochene.³¹ For all his

This is not quite the approach he adopts to Daniel, however.

²⁸ PG 81:1260.

²⁹ Cf. Christoph Schäublin, Untersuchungen zu Methode und Herkunft der antiochenischen Exegese (Theophaneia: Beiträge zur Religions- und Kirchengeschichte des Altertums 23; Köln: Hanstein, 1974), 84: “Jedes Buch soll aus einer bestimmten, vom Exegeten zu erkennenden geschichtlichen Situation heraus verstanden und gedeutet werden; diese Situation hat innerhalb der Grenzen des Zeitraums zu liegen, den die Schriften des Alten Testaments selber noch erfassen” (“Each book should be understood and interpreted on the basis of an individual historical situation that the exegete must discern; this situation must lie within the parameters that the Scriptures of the Old Testament themselves span” [my trans.]).

³⁰ PG 81:1260.

own warning that the “the letter kills,” Theodoret proceeds to read the references off the page in historical mode, thus becoming embroiled like them in the hazards of such a literalist interpretation. By way of some acknowledgement of the alternative role of prophet as nabi’ and not just seer, he will briefly concede that a prophet differs from a chronicler in not including all historical details—“only those things of which mention was required with a view to bringing benefit”³²—and hence he explains the movement in the text directly from Nebuchadnezzar to “Belshazzar” in 5:1 without inclusion of Evil-merodach (in his foreshortened catalogue of Babylonian kings). Samuel, too, is cited in the preface as one who, “instead of exercising the style of prophecy of the other prophets,” was still “the greatest of the prophets”³³ despite not reeling off kings and empires and battles and dates. And by the time Theodoret comes to Isaiah fifteen years later, under the influence of predecessors of another school he will accept that quite another dimension can be given to prophecy.³⁴

In this first foray of his into biblical prophecy, however, the prophets are primarily concerned to give a precise forecast of the future (and precision, ἀκριβεία, is vital to an Antiochene). If chapter 1 closes with the statement (in the way Theodoret takes it), “Daniel was there for one year of King Cyrus,”³⁵ the prophet meant to convey information as precisely as did the author of 2 Chr 36:22–23 (whom the commentator quotes in support) in speaking of Cyrus’s reign. “It was not without purpose,” he comments on this 1:21, “that he added this detail: he wanted to make clear the time of the whole prophecy. This was the reason he conveyed the beginning of the prophetic work and added the end of it, for us to reckon the years between the kingdoms and come to realize the whole period of the prophetic work”³⁶—even if this makes Daniel entirely lacking. The apocalyptists thus do not set forth divine utterances ultimately received in a state of ecstatic possession, and are no longer speakers, but simply authors. It follows that no saying of theirs could be collected.”

about ninety at the time and involves a contradiction with the time reference in 10:1.

Prophecy, then, has to square with history; the book of Daniel will therefore be supported in its “historical” statements by other biblical works and secular historians like Flavius Josephus. When at the close of chapter 5 the nonhistorical personage “Darius the Mede” comes on stage, Theodoret commences the following chapter with a very lengthy investigation into his origins (Mede or Persian?) in which he inevitably finds himself involved in errors and contradictions, finally insisting that he has got it right but is prepared for his readers to differ.

This we found, then, by looking for the truth in each of the inspired works; let each person take a position on it as choice dictates: no harm will flow from uncertainty about race.

Truth, factual accuracy, ἀλήθεια, is vital to prophecy; biblical statement cannot contradict itself, prophetic “coherence” is a first principle.³⁷ What the commentator has to do is to show prophecy achieving fulfillment in πράγματα, τέλος, ἔκβασις. When 11:27–28 speaks of the campaigns of Antiochus IV in Egypt and their outcome, and of what Theodoret takes to be his religious persecution in Judea, he is pleased to be able to cite confirmation: “Both the book of the Maccabees and the account of Josephus report this.”³⁸ He insists at the same time that, even though the other authors reported this activity of Antiochus as a past event, Daniel is speaking “in advance,”³⁹ a phrase recurring frequently;⁴⁰ prophecy ex eventu is not a possibility if Scripture is to be taken at face value. The plight of the young men recounted in chapter 3, their long ³⁷ Frances M. Young, Biblical Exegesis and the Formation of Christian Culture (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1997), 182, sees Antioch rejecting the word “allegory” because it was associated with a tradition of exegesis “which shattered the narrative coherence of particular texts, and the Bible as a whole.... What we do have is an important stress on the ‘reality’ of the overarching narrative.” Cf. Schäublin, Untersuchungen, 170: “Der Bezug auf die ‘Realität’, die ἀλήθεια, stellt aber die wohl entscheidende Komponente der antiochenischen ‘historischen’ Auslegung dar” (“Reference to the reality, alētheia, forms the firmly established basis of the Antiochene historical hermeneutic” [my trans.]).

hymn and the prayer of Azariah (in the text of Theodotion) he pointedly declines to apply to those suffering persecution under Antiochus.

5. THE CHALLENGE OF APOCALYPTIC

What prevents Theodoret thinking of this text in other terms than prospective prophecy is that he (and his fellow Antiochenes) finds in haggadic tales and apocalyptic material something inimical to their understanding of Scripture. If all the Old Testament authors—with the exception of the sages and a mere chronicler, but including the psalmist—are προφῆται because inspired by the Spirit, then they are capable of more than mere reflection on the past or vague prognostications of a future still to be revealed. (Hence debate even among modern scholars as to whether biblical apocalyptic finds its roots in prophecy—the more widely held view—or in wisdom, with Gerhard von Rad.)⁴¹ We find Theodore also having problems with the apocalyptic material he finds in the Twelve, such as in sections of Joel and Zechariah, and with recognizing apocalyptic motifs like the Day of the Lord. Theodoret will do little better when he reaches the Twelve and before that the apocalyptic account of Gog and Magog in chapters 38–39 in Ezekiel; here he fails to recognize the character of Daniel as a collection of haggadic tales in its first half assembled and retold by the author, and apocalyptic revelations in the second,⁴² the overall purpose being to encourage Jews suffering persecution under Antiochus IV Epiphanes in the mid-second century—just as paleo-Christian and medieval art will adopt the motifs (in the Roman catacombs and on the Irish high crosses, e.g.) to the same end.

⁴¹ Old Testament Theology (trans. D. M. G. Stalker; 2 vols.; Edinburgh: Oliver & Boyd, 1962–1965), 2:305–6.

⁴² John E. Goldingay, Daniel (WBC 40; Dallas: Word, 1989), 322, in writing of the genre of the book classes it (on the basis of its second part) as “an apocalypse,” explaining this decision thus: “Apocalypse as a genre of writing is now usefully distinguished from apocalyptic eschatology, a particular form of eschatological belief that can appear in writings of various literary forms, and from apocalypticism, a form of religious faith that can arise in particular social contexts and in which apocalyptic eschatology has a prominent place.” Alexander A. Di Lella, “Daniel,” NJB, 408, identifies two literary genres in the book, “the haggadic genre and the apocalyptic genre.”

The sweeping scenario of the book, especially its reference to a range of epochs and empires and rulers, does not register with Theodoret as the stuff of apocalyptic. In fact, in his preface he appeals to it to validate Daniel's claim to prophetic status by comparison with Obadiah, Jonah, and Nahum, who trod a much smaller stage and are yet classed as prophets by Jews. Daniel's skill as an interpreter of dreams only qualifies him as a successor to the prophet Samuel (he says in the preface), not an apocalyptic seer. The temptation to take the variation in names from Daniel to Belteshazzar in the early tales as an index of a recycled miscellany is resisted. In particular, Theodoret has extreme difficulty with the numbers, a feature of apocalyptic; try as he may, he cannot get the "seventy years" and "seventy weeks" and "a time, and times, and half a time," to add up, one problem being that he does not see in the numeral seven a symbol of completeness. In chapter 9 he is at his wits' end, despite constant efforts to get the numbers to compute; but on first principles he cannot capitulate.

Whereas some commentators suffering from unbelief think the holy prophets are at odds, those nourished on the sacred words and enlightened by divine grace find consistency in the holy prophets.⁴³

For an Antiochene, prophetic "coherence" is at risk.

The result of this inability of Theodoret and his peers to grasp the nature of apocalyptic and recognize the material before them in the book of Daniel, preferring to see it as prophecy with a factual basis, ιστορία, is that much time is spent by the commentator reconciling contradictory details and establishing historical accuracy—hence all the effort spent at the beginning of chapter 6 on identifying "Darius the Mede."⁴⁴ Unfortunately, the failure to identify genre affects interpretation of the New Testament as well. Daniel is extensively cited there, explicitly and implicitly, especially in equally apocalyptic passages, such as Jesus' eschatological discourse in Matt 24, the treatment of the antichrist (lit., “the lawless one”) in the deuterio-Pauline 2 Thessalonians, and the book of Revelation. The authors’ purpose in these places, as always with apocalyptic, is to substitute for unavailable factual precision the imaginative imagery and furniture of the end-times, like cataclysms, figures of good and evil, angelic messengers, final battles, cosmic struggles, judgment scenes, divine triumph—usually to encourage the virtuous to endure under trial. It is critical, if these New Testament passages are to be properly understood, that historical realism is not presumed, and that borrowings of Old Testament motifs are not taken as confirmation of outcomes foreknown and foretold.

Theodoret, approaching Daniel as he does, is unwilling or unable to achieve this when acknowledging New Testament citation of parts of the book. Doubtless influenced by his predecessors in Antioch and beyond, he sees the four empires that continue to figure throughout the book (today recognized as Babylonian, Mede, Persian, and Greek) as Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Greco-Seleucid and Roman. Daniel is thus thought to be looking forward to New Testament times, Jesus in his eschatological statements is taken to be confirming the prophet’s forecasts (“With the Lord’s prophecy corresponding to this prophecy, we shall be able to understand the verses before us,” Theodoret tells the readers of 11:40–45⁴⁵), and the figure of Antiochus IV whom the author retrospectively meditates on becomes the future antichrist of 2 Thess 2.⁴⁶ Interpretation of Old and New Testament texts is thus clouded—a pity in one who always aspires “to bring obscurity to clarity,” and who labors tirelessly to achieve it. In the view of one commentator on writers of this period, we are witnessing “a ‘taming’ of apocalyptic in order to integrate it into a larger picture of a Christian world order, a ‘history of salvation’ culminating in the redeemed life of the disciples of the risen Christ.”⁴⁷

6. THEODORET'S APPROACH TO COMMENTARY

Greater clarity was Theodoret's exegetical aim. This goal was conspicuously achieved in the case of the Song of Songs⁴⁸ for the reason that there he explicitly abjured an attachment to ιστορία in dealing with lyricism. He repeats this goal here in the preface to Daniel, stating that he writes to "make clear to those in ignorance the inspired composition of the most divine Daniel."⁴⁹ His failure, we have seen, arises predictably from his unwillingness in this case to divorce apocalyptic from ιστορία. It is not the result of perversity; rather, his Antiochene formation imposed hermeneutical blinkers on him, and in this case his predecessors had less to offer him than did Origen on the Song. He did, however, find grist for his mill in commenting on the prophets in the work of Cyril of Alexandria on the Twelve,⁵⁰ and he admits his indebtedness to predecessors in accepting the interpretation of the fourth beast enumerated in chapter 2 as the Roman Empire, which had been espoused by Hippolytus, Irenaeus, Origen, Eusebius, and Jerome:⁵¹ "While we for our part have thus understood the meaning of the divinely inspired Daniel, therefore, we ought also give attention to the views of some commentators before us, which is the way for the truth to be demonstrated more obviously"⁵²—a characteristic attitude of his in approaching the task of commentary. In adopting that more widely supported interpretation he rejects the view that his fellow Antiochene Theodore (it seems—if Theodore did in fact compose such a commentary)⁵³ received from his brother Polychronius of Apamea, which would have proved more helpful: “I for my part am quite surprised at some teachers of religion referring to the Macedonian Empire as the fourth beast.”⁵⁴

As always, Theodoret comes to the sacred text with a conviction of the divine inspiration of its authors: “We know they are all instruments of the divine Spirit,”⁵⁵ he says at the opening. Not so ready as Chrysostom to comment on the divine considerateness, συγκατάβασις, manifested in the mundane language of the text, he is sensitive instead to the risk the readers run of infringing divine transcendence by misinterpreting its anthropomorphisms. He resonates with the warning of the heavenly messenger at the close of the work (an editorial embellishment, in fact) that the words are to be kept sealed and secret, paraphrasing it thus: “It was not without purpose that I said this obscurely and have imposed obscurity on the words like seals, nor should divine things be presented to everyone indiscriminately.”⁵⁶ Like Chrysostom, he is happy to concede the relative obscurity of the Old Testament generally, and this work in particular, for the reason of the riddles, αίνιγματα, contained there by comparison with the New Testament.⁵⁷ The implication is that the commentator/reader should bring precision, ἀκρίβεια, to bear while respecting the elevated character of the revelation—a lesson he sees Gabriel imparting to Daniel in 9:22–23:

For your part, give precise attention to what is said; what will be said is too profound for a human being (the meaning of Chrysostom’s two homilies on the obscurity of the Old Testament, critically edited by Sergio Zincone, Omēlie sull’oscurità delle profezie (Verba Seniorum NS 12; Rome: Edizioni Studium, 1998), 74: “The Old Testament, in fact, resembles riddles; there is much difficulty in it, and its books are hard to grasp, whereas the New is clearer and easier” (my trans.). See also Robert C. Hill, “Chrysostom on the Obscurity of the Old Testament,” OCP 67 (2001) 371–83; and St. John Chrysostom: Old Testament Homilies (3 vols.; Brookline, Mass.: Holy Cross Orthodox Press, 2003), 3:1–51.

understand what is in the vision), that is, what will be said is in riddles, and requires of you precise attention for grasping it. Now, riddles occur when divine realities are spoken and written, the purpose being to prevent what is revealed to the holy ones becoming clear to everyone; after all, familiarity breeds contempt.⁵⁸

That is Antioch's first rule of commentary, "Give precise attention to what is said," and Theodoret obeys it faithfully—overly so, in light of the genre. All the details of an apocalyptic composition are seized upon; he notes, for instance, that Nebuchadnezzar's dream comes in the second year of his reign (2:1), the author "adding this further detail not without purpose, but for us to get a precise grasp of the time as well."⁵⁹ Likewise, when Daniel in his text of 10:3 claims to be fasting from "desirable bread" before the vision on the banks of the Tigris, Theodoret seeks the reason why bread is called desirable, namely, "its being nourishment for everyone alike and more sought after than any other food"⁶⁰ by comparison with the meat and wine also mentioned, the fare of the affluent.

If these are habitual features of Theodoret's commentary on a biblical text, this book invites him to develop also a distinctive approach. We have noted that he accepts it as a single, continuous, original work by one author; collection of previously existing haggadic tales is not an admissible view, nor is editorial insertion. The most he is prepared to admit is the difference in style after chapter 6 between those tales and the ἀποκαλύψεις of the remainder; he comments at that halfway point, "Having recounted those things as a historian (συγγραφεύς), as it were, he now begins to convey the predictions he learned about through the revelations."⁶¹ The language of the prayer inserted as 9:4–20 must have reminded commentator and readers of the cultic credos of Deuteronomy, but Theodoret does not allude to the possibility of different authorship. So, as will be the case when he comes to the book of Jonah, he is faced with the anomaly of author being also central character. It is not an issue he raises in the preface, but he is forced to address it when the text immediately presents Daniel and the young men in a favorable light: "He mentions their self-control and sound values, not indulging in self-glorification but proposing a beneficial lesson to those prepared to accept benefit”⁶²—so there is no problem. We might have expected also from a commentator some initial remarks on structure and the unique linguistic character of the text Theodotion is translating, but these are not forthcoming. The most he aspires to offer in the preface is, as usual for an Antiochene, “to make clear the theme (ὑπόθεσις) of the inspired work, and then in this fashion come to the textual (κατὰ λέξιν) commentary.”⁶³

Comment on the language underlying the version before him, we noted, is beyond him, though as elsewhere he is loath to admit his lack of familiarity with Hebrew. When the “holy one” in 8:14 indicates in obscure fashion the length of the persecution as three and a half years, Theodore claims that “calculated by the Hebrew system” it amounts to six and a half years, thus losing the significance contained in half of seven (which, however, he fails to appreciate elsewhere, in any case).⁶⁴ He is put on his mettle in particular in cases where Theodotion settles for transliterating a Hebrew term, and the commentator is forced to look elsewhere for enlightenment as to the term’s meaning, as at 11:16.

He will make a stand in the land of Sabeir. Some of the manuscripts have “in the land of Sabeim,” while some of those turning the Hebrew term into Greek refer to the land of Sabeir as the “land of choice” (ἐλγισις), the meaning being the land of promise, which is a matter of choice, and Mount Sion, which God loved and chose to dwell on it. “Sabeim,” on the other hand, means “power.” In any case, whether Judea is called land of choice or land of power (in fact, he called it power above, and here Sabeim or Sabeir), the king of the north will come into this land as well.⁶⁵

At a loss before the Hebrew, he first checks a LXX version, finding a Greek rendering ἐλγισις (correctly translating the Hebrew sebiy, “choice”); but aware that another version (that of Symmachus, in fact, Jerome tells us) offers “power,” he boldly—without reference to the Hebrew—claims the meaning is “power,” whereas this probably derives from a similar but different Hebrew form *saba*⁶, neither Hebrew form occurring in 11:7, as he claims. He is clearly not equipped for the task of exegesis strictly so-called, though his native Syriac helps him with another transliteration in 8:13 and a case of Semitic usage in 11:13.

Where Theodoret does excel as a biblical commentator is in his readiness (by comparison, e.g., with Theodore) to provide the background of his text for the benefit of his readers. And this work offers him ample occasion for assisting them: right from the preface he begins distinguishing kings of Judah that bear similar and alternative names that could prove confusing. In comment on chapter 7 he finds it helpful to outline for the readers the extent of the Persian Empire in biblical times as compared with his own day, and the divisions of Alexander's empire after his death; on 11:4 he informs them that, while the Persian rulers they are familiar with belong to the Arsacid dynasty, Cyrus came from the Achaemenids. As he will reveal in his work on the Psalms, an author's imagery is not lost on him, either, and he takes pains to unpack images for the readers, as he does at length with the Benedicite hymn of the (young) men in chapter 3. Though not recognizing the haggadic tales in the first half of the work for what they are, he responds to them as their original author would have intended, warming to their moral character. He gets so carried away with the trial of the three men by Nebuchadnezzar as to forget that, if time cues are to be respected, the "young men" must have matured somewhat after a couple of decades at the king's court. "Against him, by contrast, God sent in vengeance not an angel, as he did in the case of that fellow Sennacherib, but three young captives forced to live in a foreign land, pressed into service at this early age, in the very springtime of their lives."⁶⁶ Theodoret is not for spoiling a good story with the facts, for all his commitment to ιστορία.

In his enthusiasm for providing background for the text, and despite his aspiration to ἀκριβεία (a term meaning "precision," of course, not "accuracy"—though often so translated), he can blot his copy at times. The Bible has not helped him by telescoping the succession in the Babylonian monarchy, and by coming up with the mythical "Darius the Mede," a real thorn in his side. He has recourse half-a-dozen times to Josephus (through Eusebius, Guinot suggests⁶⁷) when the Bible, especially Maccabees, needs supplementing.

The Antiochenes in their biblical commentaries are not given to spending time applying the sacred text to the lives of their readers, even in the case of the Psalms; we need only refer to the treatment of a moving hymn like Ps 42 by Diodore, Theodore, Chrysostom and Theodoret, respectively.⁶⁸ Though the psalmists, like Daniel and his companions, find themselves in situations of trial and tribulation, and give vent to expressions that have appealed to the religious sentiments of people through the ages, Antioch is prepared to let them speak for themselves, the commentator being content with clarification. Theodoret will warm to the narrative of the plight of the (young) men, even embellishing it; but when it comes to their long hymn Benedicite, he is content to analyze the imagery, not to play spiritual director (perhaps presuming the hymn is familiar to them from the liturgy). As has been remarked, theirs is an “asceticism without mysticism.”⁶⁹

7. THEOLOGICAL ACCENTS

If Daniel is seen as a prophetic work by the commentator, its prophecy is not generally seen as christological in reference, even to the extent of the prophecies of the Twelve soon to undergo commentary at Theodoret's hands. It is as though only Jewish exegesis to the contrary elicits any christological elaboration here. The commentator does not, of course, bypass the figure of the Son of Man at 7:13, where he sees (in typically Antiochene dyophysite terms) Daniel “prophesying the second coming of the Savior, clearly calling him Son of Man on account of the nature he had assumed, coming on the clouds in keeping with his own promise to bring out his authority, and receiving as man honor and rule and kingship from the Ancient of Days.”⁷⁰ But he does not elaborate on this identification. Likewise, when he comes to 9:24, “Seventy weeks have been determined for your people and your holy city for the fault to grow old and the sin finished,” he cites a battery of evidently well-rehearsed texts to show that the reference is to the Jews’ crime of crucifixion and to the forgiveness of believers by Christ the Lord.⁷¹ The text to which most lengthy christological attention is paid is 2:34–35 mentioning “the stone hewn out of a mountain without hands being used”; after again rehearsing an arsenal of texts to confute Jewish interpretation, and borrowing the detail of the virgin birth from another source, Theodoret concludes, “So we learn from Old and New Testaments that our Lord Jesus Christ was called stone: it was cut from a mountain without hands being used, being born of a virgin independently of marital intercourse.”⁷² For Theodoret, Jesus’ principal role in connection with Daniel is in citing the book in his eschatological discourses in the Gospels, as though this established its ἀλήθεια and Daniel’s status as a prophet.

If Theodoret did not appreciate the purpose of the book of Daniel as encouragement of the Jews under persecution in the second century by the tyrant Antiochus, he relished its happy ending in the three (young) men’s survival and Daniel’s rise to prominence and esteem—an outcome in keeping with Antiochene morality. That Daniel should enjoy the confidence of the palace master on arrival in Babylon was only fitting: “Divine care is a consequence of our free will,” comments Theodoret, “and once it opts for the divine commands, it enjoys divine assistance.”⁷³ This priority given to human initiative over divine grace appears also in Theodoret’s comment on the opening to Daniel’s prayer that has been inserted into the text as 9:4–20: “He spoke of his keeping covenant and mercy with those who love him in recalling the promises to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Being very precise in his prayer, he mentions that he does not keep it with anyone, but with those who love him and keep his commandments: if someone transgresses your commands, he renders himself unworthy of the promises.”⁷⁴ On the other hand, the commentator closes his preface by begging for divine assistance in beginning his commentary.⁷⁵ Antioch can be ambiguous on the respective roles of grace and human effort in the moral life.⁷⁶

8. THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THEODORET'S COMMENTARY ON DANIEL

We would relish the opportunity to read commentaries on the book of the “man of desires” by all the major Antiochenes. Unfortunately, we have no guarantee that any but Theodoret completed such a work (Theodore’s claim resting on uncertain grounds)—and this fact alone gives his Commentary on Daniel particular significance in the history of exegesis. Would all his peers have adopted the same tack that makes his so intriguing and annoying at the same time, and have allowed us to see them directly addressing that basic issue we find him proposing, What constitutes prophecy? What does a prophet do? Although there is evidence that Theodore’s brother Polychronius thought differently, we are encouraged to see in this uniquely extant work from the school of Antioch features that are typical. The very aspects of Daniel that led Jewish and more recent commentators to class it as apocalyptic—times and numbers and a sweeping geographical and chronological scenario—lent its author in the Antiochene view a supposed basis in ιστορία beyond the great figures normally classed (by today’s readers) as major prophets, thus making the work irresistible. In its uniqueness, therefore, this commentary from Theodoret, conceded to be Antioch’s most mature and “modéré” representative, is valuable in exemplifying its understanding of the nature and role of biblical prophecy, as do to a less extent his work and Theodore’s on the Twelve (Minor) Prophets, where the basic issue does not arise in such a challenging way.

As to Theodoret’s success in his task of commentary on this book, he brings the same abilities and commitment as elsewhere in responding to the author’s thought and poetic expression with typical precision, if subjecting his biblical text to even less rigorous paleographical scrutiny than his linguistic limitations allow.

⁷⁶ Cf. Robert C. Hill, “A Pelagian Commentator on the Psalms?” ITQ 63 (1998): 263–71.

His dedication to clarity and conciseness is as patent here as in his other exegetical works. What hinders him in particular in doing justice to such a challenging text for his readers, however, is his inability to recognize the haggadic and apocalyptic material before him, which undermines his attempt to convince them of the book's claim to a place in the Bible's prophetic corpus—the aim he set himself from the very outset. That ignorance of genres common to all the Antiochenes prevents his distinguishing apocalyptic from prophecy: Daniel must be a prophet (Jesus said so, and “the Jews of old” admitted as much), prophecy has to square with history, and can only be prospective. Hence the book is about “the kings of the time and the dates,” and it is only a matter of deciphering the former and getting the latter to compute; the author is contemporary with Babylon's greatness, as he claims, and the real plight of Jews under Antiochus Epiphanes is beyond his ken. The harder Theodoret works at backgrounding this oblique material for his readers—and none of his peers works harder—the less justice he does to the author's purpose, which is at variance with the commentator's.

His fellow Antiochenes (Polychronius aside) would probably have fared no better; Daniel, like the New Testament apocalyptic Theodoret cites in support, does not yield its secrets to that approach. By contrast, his previous work on the Song of Songs had opened up for him a different way to respond to Old Testament material, as would the Psalms later. But predecessors of a different school were not so helpful in this case; and in any event the “man of desires” could not be taken at a spiritual level: his status as a prophet was under question by Jewish savants of the commentator's time, and he had to be firmly attached to the fabric of history. Predictably, the effort to reconstruct an historical context, doubtless convincing for Theodoret's contemporaries, does not work for modern readers. He will not feel the need to repeat the exercise when he comes to commenting on Ezekiel and Isaiah,⁷⁷ whose place among the Latter Prophets was never under question as was Daniel's, and whose recourse to apocalyptic is limited.

⁷⁷ While it is his Commentary on Jeremiah that concludes Theodoret's treatment of the Bible's prophetic corpus, the form in which that work has come down to us (PG 81:496–806, including Baruch and Lamentations, showing signs of derivation from the catenae) leaves us less certain of his approach to that prophetic text.

COMMENTARY ON DANIEL

If it were easy for everyone to explicate the utterances of the divine prophets, to get beyond the surface of the letter and penetrate to the depths,² and to light upon the pearl of the contents hidden there, perhaps it would rightfully be thought an idle endeavor to produce a commentary on them in writing if everyone easily arrived at the prophetic message simply by reading. | But though we all share in the one nature, we do not all enjoy equal knowledge: “To each is given the manifestation of the Spirit for the common good; to one is given the utterance of wisdom through the Spirit, to another the utterance of knowledge according to the same Spirit, to another faith by the same Spirit,”³ and so on in similar fashion, everything being distributed differently. Hence I think it in no way improper for me to put into writing their teaching for those ignorant of their divine written works, raised on them as I have been from my youth and the beneficiary of some little knowledge from many pious writers.⁴ 1257

After all, the divine law bids us teach our offspring what we have learned from our parents: “Teach it to your children and your children’s children.”⁵ This is the reason the great teacher David also says, “Heed my law, my people, incline your ear to the words of my mouth. I shall open my mouth in proverbs, I shall utter riddles from of old.” Then to make clear from what source he learned

⁵ Deut 4:9, a text Theodoret will cite again when he comes to comment upon the following psalm in his later Commentary on the Psalms. For the latter, see Robert C. these things, he says, “All that we heard and came to know, and that our fathers recounted to us, was not hidden from their children for another generation.” And to bring out the source of the knowledge, he says, “He gave a law in Israel, everything he commanded our ancestors to convey to their children so that another generation may know them, children yet to be born to them; they will rise up and announce them to their children.” And to bring out the value of the teaching he goes on, “That they may place their hope in God, and not forget his works but seek out his commandments.”⁶ Having received this teaching from our parents, then, we owe a due debt to those who come after you and are yet to be, and must discharge this obligation gratefully. Now, it is not only the divine law that prompts us: many illustrious acquaintances also have made earnest supplication to us and obliged us to summon up courage for this contest.

So come now, let us to the best of our ability make clear to those in ignorance the inspired composition of the most divine Daniel. Perhaps this labor of ours, however, will not prove without benefit even to those already enjoying knowledge: they will either discover more than they thought, or by discovering their ideas in ours they will confirm by the commonality what they came upon through their own efforts, the consensus of a greater number normally strengthening our convictions. Now, for the moment let us endeavor to comment on this prophet without scorning the others—perish the thought: we know they are all instruments of the divine Spirit. Firstly, however, | it is because our friends re- 1260
quired of us commentary on this author, and we consider it a duty to give the petitioners the favor they request. But furthermore it is the Jews’ folly and shamelessness that causes us to pass over the others for the moment and expound this author’s prophecies and make them clear, embarking as they did on such brazen behavior as to cordon off this author from the band of the prophets and strip him of the prophetic title itself.⁷

⁶ Ps 78:1–7.

⁷ It is clear from Ben Sira (cf. Sir 48:22–49:12) in the early second century B.C.E. that Daniel (probably composed later than that) was not numbered among the (Latter—a still later term) Prophets with Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and The Twelve (“minor” or shorter, Augustine’s term) Prophets. Hence in the Hebrew Bible the book is included instead among the Writings, whereas the LXX and Vulgate place it after Ezekiel. Theodoret, in fact, is treating of it before the

Yet while this contrivance of theirs is brazen, it is not without significance. After all, he prophesied much more clearly than all the others the coming of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ, not only foretelling what he would do but also foretelling the time, stipulating the number of years until his coming and clearly listing all the disasters that would befall them personally in consequence of their unbelief. So it is not surprising that as haters of God and enemies of the truth they would shamelessly presume to claim that the one who gave utterance to these and countless other oracles is no prophet, confident that their own judgment was sufficient to confirm this falsehood. Now, it is not surprising if after inveighing against the Only Begotten they malign the Lord's devoted ministers, this latter behavior being in accord with the former. Hence the Lord, too, says, "If they persecuted me, they will also persecute you," and again, "If they called the master of the house Beelzebul, how much more will they abuse his household."⁸

For us to refute their brazen claims in abundance, however, let us pose this question to them: what do you claim is typical of a prophet? Perhaps their reply would be, Foreseeing and foretelling the future. Let us see, therefore, whether blessed Daniel had a foreknowledge of it and foretold it. For the time being let us pass over the account of Christ the Lord, and concentrate on his other prophecies. We find him, then, making many prophecies about the kingdom of the Babylonians, many about that of the Persians and the Macedonians, and many also about that of the Romans, what the king of the Babylonians will suffer, how Persians will take over his kingdom, then the fact that the Macedonian will destroy them and will himself meet a rapid end, and four people will succeed to the kingdom in place of one, and the fact that from one of these someone will spring up and wreak havoc on the Jews, and they will receive divine help and be freed from his ferocity. From that point he then moves to foretell the power of the Romans, and the fact that they will conquer all the kingdoms and exact tribute from them all. What should be said of all his prophecies of the kings of the Egyptians and | the Syrians, all the troubles they will others, leaving Ezekiel for his next work, and Isaiah and Jeremiah until the end of his exegetical career; the reason for its priority seems to be a polemical one, the question raised by the Jews about its place in the prophetic corpus (which modern readers would also raise), as well as those appeals from curious readers.

bring on one another, the later peace treaties through marriage and kinship, then in turn the implacable wars after reconciliation had been achieved?

How, therefore, would it not be impious and sacrilegious to exclude from the band of the prophets the one who foreknew and foretold all this, and left a record of it in writing? I mean, if this does not belong to prophecy, what is typical of prophecy? If, on the other hand, they eliminate him from the company of prophets for the reason that he does not prefix to his own words the phrase, Thus says the Lord, let them tell us what expression of this kind the patriarch Abraham uttered to be called prophet by the God of all. It was said of Abraham, remember, "Return the wife to her husband now, because he is a prophet, and he will pray for you, and you and all your household will live." Blessed David said of himself, his son and his descendants, "God charged kings on their behalf, Lay no hand on my anointed, do no harm to my prophets."⁹ And Samuel, the greatest prophet, a temple minister from his youth, instead of exercising the style of prophecy of the other prophets was given foreknowledge, understanding, and prophecy either in dreams or in revelations by day.¹⁰ So take issue openly also with them, and expel them publicly from the group of the prophets. If, on the other hand, you decline to exhibit madness toward them, be careful not to slander him as well: he is a prophet, and a prophet who received knowledge of the future by desire and longing,¹¹ was instructed in future events by sweat and tears, fasting and ill-treatment, and who learned and taught ahead of time not only what would happen to the Jews but the divine plan for the common affairs of the whole world.

Consider, then, whether it would not be highly unfair to include among the prophets Obadiah, who forecast only the troubles

⁹ Gen 20:7 (loosely cited); Ps 105:14–15.

befalling the Idumeans, and Jonah and Nahum, who prophesied about a single city, Nineveh, but to strip blessed Daniel of the title of prophet, though he made prophecies not of a single city or of a tiny nation but of the greatest kingdoms—Chaldean, Persian, Macedonian, Roman—and what was done by them individually, and to say he has no claim to the spiritual charism. Indeed, in your gross ingratitude you should even respect Nebuchadnezzar, that | 1264
 irreligious, cruel, savage man, a stranger to the divine mysteries, who cried aloud about Daniel in the words, “The holy Spirit of God is in him.”¹² It was, in fact, an effect of the truly divine Spirit both to describe the dream another person had seen and forgotten and to give a precise and correct explanation of it. Yet not even this convinces you to cease your frenzy against the prophet; instead, in the prophet you contend with the Lord of the prophet. The prophet, however, will suffer no harm from your machinations: the divine writings show him to be a prophet, and the fulfillment of the prophecy confirms the foreknowledge: witnessing the events in our time, we understand those ancient prophecies, and with guidance from them we easily appreciate the occurrence of the events, whereas you display your peculiar frenzy even in this. While for the time being, however, we have in summary fashion refuted your brazen claims, the verse-by-verse commentary will provide a yet clearer refutation of your folly.

So come now, having given an adequate defense of ourselves and sufficient accusation of Jews, let us first make clear the theme of the inspired work, and then in this fashion come to the textual commentary. After Josiah, the king who proved to be pious, Jehoahaz his son ruled Judah for three whole months and a few days. He had two names, being called Jehoahaz in Kings and Chronicles, whereas the blessed prophet Jeremiah calls him Shallum.¹³ Pharaoh Neco king of Egypt took him prisoner and led him off as a captive to Egypt, in his place appointing his brother Eliakim king and calling him Jehoiakim; he reigned eleven years and a few months. In the third year of his reign Nebuchadnezzar king of the Babylonians invaded, taking prisoner not a few of the nobility, seizing also some of the sacred vessels dedicated to divine worship, imposing a tribute on Jehoiakim and departing to Babylon. Then, when he refused to pay the tribute, he attacked Jerusalem again, captured the city, slew him and in his place appointed as king his son, called Jehoiachin by the Jews but once more given a different name Eliakim,¹⁴ | the prophet Jeremiah calling him Jeconiah: “As I live, says the Lord, if Jeconiah, son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, were to be the signet ring on my right hand, I would tear you from there and give you into the hands of those who seek your life, of whose presence you are afraid, into the hands of the Chaldeans.”¹⁵ So when he had governed the kingdom for three months and a few days, Nebuchadnezzar king of the Babylonians then sent his army and a general once again, and took him off in captivity to Babylon, entrusting the kingdom to his uncle Zedekiah; he reigned eleven years. Next, when he did not pay the tribute that had been imposed, the king of the Babylonians marched against Jerusalem with great might, then besieged it, used famine as an ally against them, brought siege machines to the ramparts, breached the wall, slew most of them, captured the rest and took them off in chains, consigning both city and temple to the flames. 1265

The God of all, however, who allowed Jews to suffer this on account of their grave lawlessness, did not deprive them of his characteristic care with the purpose of punishing them absolutely: he gave those in Judea as pedagogues Uriah son of Shemaiah¹⁶ and Jeremiah son of Hilkiah, a man conspicuous for priesthood and prophecy.¹⁷ In the company of those taken off as prisoners to Babylon in the first captivity, he sent with Daniel also Ezekiel, Hananiah, Azariah and Mishaël so that they might have diligent teachers in the way of life according to the law and incur no se-

¹⁴ It is thought, rather, that Jehoiakim died of natural causes (though Dan 1:2 could encourage Theodoret’s idea of his execution), leaving the throne to Jehoiachin (a name not different in form in Greek from Jehoiakim—hence Theodoret’s gratuitous remark that he also bore the name of Eliakim, Jehoiakim’s original name).

¹⁶ Cf. Jer 26:20–23.

¹⁷ As in his commentary on Jer 1:1, Theodoret seems to presume Jeremiah is himself a priest rather than simply from a priestly family (Hebrew and Greek of that verse being ambiguous, and modern commentators also undecided). He proceeds to conflate, as he has done with 1–2 Kings, 1–2 Chronicles, and Jeremiah, the evidence from Daniel and Ezekiel as though prophetic books of equal status and historical value.

rious harm from association with savages, having them instead as a model to remind them of their forbears' virtue and sound values. The God of all displays such great care of sinners in allowing those devoted to his service and ever zealous in attending on him to be taken captive for their benefit, to endure harsh slavery and incur grave dangers, and to pass their life in storms and billows. This is why, in fact, he says in the prophet Hosea, "For your sake I killed the prophets with a word of my mouth";¹⁸ this is why to procure the salvation of the world he allowed the holy apostles to endure the sufferings that are on record. To display this providence for the Jews, he also arranged for those in the company of blessed Daniel to reach Babylon with them; he was young | and in the bloom of youth, was reared in the palace with those 1268 God-loving youngsters, enjoyed from his youth the blossoming of divine grace, was filled with wisdom and understanding of every kind, and on the one hand won great favor with the potentate, and on the other was a source of benefit to him by proclaiming the message of true religion.¹⁹ And not only to him but also to all his subjects: what he learned from this man's teaching he transmitted to his subjects by publicly proclaiming a law bidding all the citizens to serve the God of which he was the mediator.

When it was that this divinely inspired prophet was taken off to Babylon, therefore, why he was, and for what great benefits he was responsible, not only to his kinsmen but also to the foreigners,²⁰ we have told concisely.²¹ The force of his prophecy, on the other hand, we shall give more precise attention to in the detailed commentary. So, after calling upon divine grace in support, let us begin the clarification.

¹⁸ Hos 6:5.

²¹ Helpfully as a teacher, Theodoret sums up his introduction, which typically he claims—rightfully—was done with conciseness, συνομιλία, a virtue with which Photius will credit him. Precision, ἀκριβεία, is also an Antiochene characteristic, as is the view that divine grace acts in a supportive (συνεργόν) role, not initiating the author's work.

CHAPTER I

In the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah, Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came to Jerusalem and besieged it (v. 1). Of necessity he made mention before everything else of the king of the time and informed us of the period so that we might know clearly the time of the first captivity: it was in the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim, known also as Eliakim, who reigned after Jehoahaz but was the father of the Jehoahaz who was called both Jehoiachin and Jeconiah, that the first capture of Jerusalem occurred.²² Now, this very feature, his mentioning the kings of the time and the dates, betrays his prophetic character, it being possible to find the other prophets doing likewise. Scripture says, remember, “A vision which Isaiah son of Amoz saw in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah, kings of Judah”; and “A word of the Lord came to Jeremiah in the days of King Josiah son of Amon of Judah in the thirteenth year of his reign.”²³ And Ezekiel | and in most cases each of the other prophets employed this introduction to their prophecy. So it suffices also to convict Jews of frenzy and establish the prophet as truly a prophet. 1269

The Lord gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand, and some of the vessels of the house of God (v. 2). This also shows the spiritual grace in him: while it is not possible for everyone to know the divine dispensations, he had been accorded the divine Spirit and knew them clearly, and he informs the others that with the permission of the God of all it was due to the lawless behavior and grave impiety of the people and the king that the city was taken and some of the sacred vessels fell into the power of the enemy. It was quite inevitable that he should make the statement The Lord gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand, lest anyone form the impression that it was by using his own power that Nebuchadnezzar prevailed over the city dedicated to God; and it was for everyone

²² Is Theodoret confused here (perhaps by the fact that Jehoiakim and Jehoiachin appear identically in Greek) in adding the detail that Jehoiachin's father was also a Jehoahaz—or is the translator misrepresenting him? What he does not advert to is that “the third year” of Jehoiakim's reign, 606, is in fact a year before Nebuchadnezzar's becoming king and nine years before his first siege of Jerusalem; ἀκριβεία does not necessarily denote accuracy.

τοῦ Θεοῦ προδεδωκότος, καὶ τὴν πάλαι φρουροῦσαν τὴν πόλιν ἀποστήσαντος χάριν, ὑπὸ τοὺς πολεμίους ἐγένετο. Τοῦτο καὶ διὰ Ἡσαΐου τοῦ προφήτου σαφὲς ποιῶν αὐτὸς ὁ τῶν ὅλων Θεὸς οὕτω φησί· «Μὴ δοξασθῇσεται ἄξινη ἄνευ τοῦ κόπτοντος ἐν αὐτῇ; ἢ ὑψωθῇσεται πρίων ἄνευ τοῦ ἔλκοντος αὐτόν;» Διδάσκει δὲ διὰ τούτων, ὡς αὐτὸς τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἐπιφέρει τὰς τιμωρίας, κέχρηται δὲ ὀργάνοις τοῖς εἰς τοῦτο ἐπιτηδεύουσιν. «Καὶ ἤνεγκεν αὐτά, φησὶν, εἰς γῆν Σενναάρ, εἰς οἶκον θεοῦ αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὰ σκεύη εἰσήνεγκεν εἰς οἶκον τοῦ θησαυροῦ τοῦ θεοῦ αὐτοῦ.» Καὶ ἴσως ἂν τις εἴποι· Τί δήποτε τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἡμαρτηκότων, τὰ ἅγια σκεύη, τὰ τῷ Θεῷ ἀνακείμενα, παρεδόθη δυσσεβέσιν ἀνθρώποις; Φασὶ δὲ ταῦτα οἱ τῶν θείων οἰκονομιῶν τὸν σκοπὸν ἀγνοοῦντες. «Ψυχικὸς γὰρ ἄνθρωπος οὐ δέχεται τὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος τοῦ Θεοῦ· μωρία γὰρ αὐτῷ ἐστίν· ὁ δὲ πνευματικὸς ἀνακρίνει πάντα,» κατὰ τὸν θεῖον Ἀπόστολον· καὶ πέπεισται μὲν ὅτι μάτην οὐδὲν ὑπὸ τῆς θείας προμηθείας οἰκονομεῖται, φωτιζόμενος δὲ ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ Πνεύματος, καὶ τὰς αἰτίας μακροθυμεῖ· ὥσπερ ἀμέλει καὶ τὸ νῦν ζητούμενον ἔστι καταμαθεῖν τὸν πνευματικῶς νοεῖν προαιρούμενον. Ὁ γὰρ τοὺς λογικοὺς παραδούς τιμωρίᾳ, τί δήποτε τῶν ἀψύχων ἐφείδετο; Διδάσκει δὲ αὐτοὺς καὶ δι' αὐτῶν τῶν πραγμάτων, ὅτι Βαβυλωνίων, τῶν βαρβάρων, τῶν δυσσεβῶν, κατ' οὐδὲν διαφέρουσιν· ἀσεβοῦσι γὰρ ὥσπερ to learn precisely that it fell into the hands of the enemy when God surrendered it and withdrew the grace that formerly protected the city. To make this clear the God of all speaks in these terms also through the prophet Isaiah, "Surely an axe will not be glorified without the one wielding it, or a saw be exalted without the one using it?"²⁴ In this he brings out that he personally will inflict retribution on people and use instruments suited to that end.

He brought them to the land of Shinar, to the house of his god, and introduced the vessels into the house of the treasury of his god. Perhaps you may ask,²⁵ Why on earth was it that, with people sinning, the holy vessels dedicated to God were surrendered to impious people? Those who say this are ignorant of the purpose of the divine dispensations. "Unspiritual persons do not receive the gifts of God's Spirit, being foolishness to them, whereas spiritual persons discern everything,"²⁶ according to the divine apostle, and, being illuminated by the divine spirit, are convinced that nothing planned by divine providence is without purpose, and come to learn the reason, just as of course the person who opts to understand in a spiritual fashion is able to grasp what is our present object of enquiry. You see, great benefit accrued from this not only to Jews but also to the foreigners themselves: Jews first were instructed in the immunity from need in the divine nature, God accepting what is offered by human beings not out of need but to teach them gratitude and supply them with attention and grounds for response. I mean, how would we otherwise be able to repay a beneficent God for his benefits to us unless | he accepted these trifling and insignificant things from the offerers? In his wish to convince Jews, therefore, that it was not to satisfy his own need but to make allowance for their weakness that he accepted offerings from them, he was right to turn away from them and hand them over to captivity, and allowed to be captured with them the vessels offered by them through which they thought to serve him. After all, if he handed over rational beings to retribution, why did he spare inanimate things?

He teaches them even through events themselves that they are no different from Babylonians, barbaric and godless though ²⁴ Isa 10:15.

ἐκεῖνοι, μᾶλλον δὲ πλεον ἤπερ ἐκεῖνοι. Οἱ μὲν γὰρ οὔτε νόμον δεξάμενοι, οὔτε προφητῶν ποδηγῶν ἀπολαύσαντες, ἀγνοίᾳ κατείχοντο· οἱ δὲ ὑπὸ μυρίων παλαιῶν τε καὶ νέων φωτιζόμενοι προφητῶν, καὶ μυρίων ὅσων θαυμάτων αὐτόπται γενόμενοι, κατεφρόνουν μὲν τοῦ τῶν ὅλων Θεοῦ, τὰ δὲ ἄψυχα εἰδωλα θεραπεύοντες διετέλουν. Παρέδωκε τοίνυν τοῖς βαρβάροις τὰ σκεύη, μονονουχὶ λέγων δι' αὐτῶν τῶν πραγμάτων, ὅτι Κατ' οὐδὲν τῶν βαρβάρων διαφέρετε· ὁμοίως γὰρ αὐτὰ καὶ ὑμεῖς ταῖς παρανομίαις μολύνετε, καὶ ἴσον ἐστὶν ὑμᾶς τε ταῦτα ἔχειν, καὶ Βαβυλωνίους· ἀσέβεια γὰρ καὶ ὑμῶν κἀκείνων κρατεῖ. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ Βαλτάζαρ ὁ βασιλεὺς χρήσασθαι τούτοις ἐτόλμησεν ἐστιώμενος, ἐκολάσθη μὲν παρρυτίκα καὶ τὴν ἀξίαν ἔτισε δίκην, ἐδίδαξε δὲ ἅπαντας διὰ τῆς τιμωρίας, πόση τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ δύναμις τῶν σκευῶν ἐκείνων, καὶ ὅτι οὐκ ἄκων ἀπεστερήθη τῶν ἑαυτοῦ, ἀλλ' ἐκὼν αὐτὰ προὔδωκε διὰ τὴν πολλὴν τοῦ λαοῦ παρανομίαν. Ἰνα δὲ μὴ μέγα φρονήσαντες οἱ ἀλλόφυλοι, ὡς αὐτοὶ περιγενόμενοι τοῦ Θεοῦ (ἐνόμιζον γὰρ τὴν κιβωτὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι τὸν τῶν Ἰουδαίων Θεόν, τεκμηρίῳ χρώμενοι τῇ τῶν οἰκείων εἰ-

they are; for they are as impious as the latter—or, rather, even more than the latter: without being in receipt of a law or enjoying guidance of prophets, these people were in the grip of ignorance, whereas the former had been enlightened by both ancient and recent prophets and were witnesses of countless marvels, yet scorned the God of all and kept serving lifeless idols. So he handed the vessels over to the foreigners as if to say through the events themselves, You are no different from the foreigners, defiling these things in similar fashion in your case with your transgressions, and it is the same thing for you to have them as for the Babylonians, since godlessness has control of both you and them. This sufficed, therefore, to censure and chastise also the Jews, and to bring them no little benefit, while the Babylonians, in showing respect for the vessels in their fashion by keeping them from human usage and devoting them to the gods worshiped by them, came to no harm. But when King Belshazzar presumed to use them at a banquet, he was immediately punished and paid the due penalty, on the one hand, and on the other he provided a lesson to everyone through the punishment of the great power of the God of those vessels and of the fact that, far from being deprived of his own things against his will, he had willingly handed them over as a result of the people's grave lawlessness.²⁷

He had also done this of old in the case of the ark: when Ophni and Phineas, lawless and loathsome sons of the priest Eli, took it in support of their kinsmen and went off, God charged them with impiety, according them no providence, and consigning them deservedly to slaughter and the ark to the Philistines.²⁸ His purpose again was to chastise Israel and convey the fact that instead of his needing the ark, he had made it for them; but use of it was lost on them when they transgressed the divine law and opted for a life of impiety. Lest the Philistines boast, however, of prevailing over God, thinking the ark was the Jews' god by analogy with the manufacture of their own idols, and in case | they incur great harm from taking the Jews' god captive and devoting it to their own gods as a kind of trophy, he caused the idol Dagon worshiped by them to fall and break in pieces in front of the ark so as to give an idea of worship, to admit its defeat by the event and demonstrate the subjection of the demon inside it. This happened not only once but many times; he inflicted different disasters on them until they gave back the ark and made many offerings suggesting retribution.²⁹ At that time, too, in the case of Nebuchadnezzar, therefore, the benefit proved to be twofold: the license given by God for a short time was of benefit not only to Jews but also to the foreigners.

The king told Ashpenaz his chief eunuch to bring in some of the captive children of the people of Israel of royal birth and from the partemim, young men of no deformity, comely to behold, versed in all wisdom, endowed with knowledge and insight, grounded in good manners, gifted with strength, to take their place in the house of the king and be taught the literature and language of the Chaldeans (vv. 3–4). Whereas the God of all, then, chose the world's lame, weak, and despised so as to shame the wise and powerful,³⁰ human beings look for bodily charm, stature, and good health, not the wisdom acquainted with divine things but the wisdom adorned with fine speech. From this you can also learn, therefore, the gap between divine and human criteria. It betrays the king's arrogance in wanting to take as attendants not only the other captives but also those of royal blood. Yet here is fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah spoken to King Hezekiah, "Listen to the word of the Lord of hosts which he spoke to me, Lo, days are coming when they will take everything in your house, and everything your fathers have amassed to this day will come to Babylon, and they will leave nothing, God said, because they will even take some of the children you have begotten and will make them eunuchs in the house of the king of the Babylonians."³¹ To remind us of this prophecy, blessed Daniel says the king ordered some of the captive children of Israel of royal birth and some of the partemim be brought in, by the Hebrew term partemim referring to the maidens, though partemim Symmachus rendered as "chosen."³² |

The king ordered them daily portions of food from the king's table and wine from his supply. They were to be educated for three years, and after that to take their place before the king. Among them were Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah from the children of Judah (vv. 5–6). So here he informs us of the king's generosity in providing them with nourishment that was not of an ordinary kind fit for captives and slaves; instead, he gave orders for them to share in the king's table. Shortly afterwards he mentions their self-control and sound values, not indulging in self-glorification but proposing a beneficial lesson to those prepared to accept benefit. It is possible to see also the moderation in his thinking: after mentioning above that the king ordered young men of royal birth to be chosen, fair to behold and of becoming stature, and citing at this point the persons' names, he simply referred to the tribe of Judah and concealed their royal connections. The chief eunuch gave them names, to Daniel Belteshazzar, to Hananiah Shadrach, to Mishael Meshach, and to Azariah Abednego (v. 7). This was considered by some the right of masters, in buying slaves to change their names so that also by the change in name they would recognize their servitude. The chief eunuch did it in this case, too, taking away their Hebrew names and giving Chaldean ones, also for the reason that the king had ordered the young men to learn the Chaldean language.

Daniel's heartfelt resolve was that he not be defiled by eating the king's food and drinking his wine, and he made a request to the chief eunuch not to be defiled (v. 8). Those who love God, you see, take no account of place in seeking God in everything: wherever they go, they offer him the same worship, and when in misfortune they likewise adore their creator. In this case you can find an extraordinary example of this marvel: reared by Jews and versed in the local requirements for worship of God, then inhabiting a foreign land, forced into slavery at a very young age and obliged to live under other laws, they were anxious to preserve their ancestral religion. Since they saw the Babylonians defiling their food with invocation of the idols and polluting their drink³³ with libations, they showed scorn for their material welfare, spurned the delights of the king's voluptuous fare, and begged the chief eunuch to al-

low them to decline a share in the royal victuals. | God granted 1277
Daniel to find mercy and compassion with the chief eunuch (v. 9). Divine care is a consequence of our free will, and once it opts for the divine commands, it enjoys divine assistance. You can see this happening also in the case of Joseph: “The Lord was with Joseph; he was a successful man, and the Lord poured mercy on him and favor with the jailer.”³⁴ So we learn from this that God never left to their own devices any of those who believe in him. Hence another inspired author also cries aloud, “Ask the generations before you, Who trusted in the Lord and was disappointed?”³⁵

The chief eunuch said to Daniel, I am afraid that my lord the king, who has prescribed your food and drink, may chance to notice that your appearance is wan by comparison with the youngsters of your age, and you would cause the king to have my head (v. 10). The chief eunuch’s apprehension was not without reason: he was a person without experience of spiritual grace, considering human things in a human fashion, and believing that bodies could be nourished and developed only with rich and varied foods. So he was afraid that a difference in appearance would emerge between those richly nourished and those living austere, and he would receive the ultimate penalty at the hands of the king, who had given orders to the contrary. When blessed Daniel saw his apprehension, however, he directed his appeal to Amelasar,³⁶ whom the chief eunuch put in charge of him, Hananiah, Azariah, and Mishael, saying, Please test your servants for ten days, give us vegetables to eat and water to drink. Compare our appearance with the appearance of the youngsters eating the king’s fare, and deal with your servants as you observe (vv. 12–13). Nothing is stronger than faith in God; you can learn this also from many other places, but especially from the words of the divinely inspired Daniel. I mean, what greater degree of piety is left to match believing and trusting that he would enjoy divine favor and appear more comely and charming and stronger by not eating when the others were eating and being fed and enjoying the royal delicacies? Now, he did

Τὸ αὐτὸ δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἰωσήφ ἔστιν αὐτὸν εὐρεῖν πεποιηκότα, καὶ ἐπὶ Σαμουὴλ τοῦ προφήτου· παιδίῳ γὰρ ὄντι κομιδῇ νέῳ, καὶ ἐπεφάνη, καὶ τὰς κατὰ τοῦ πρεσβύτου τιμωρίας

well to combine petition with persuasion, Test your servants for ten days, | give us vegetables to eat and water to drink, and become the judge of our appearance: if you find harm coming to our bodies from such a diet, do what you think best, and we shall not object. Such concern for the divine laws and faith in the lawgiver did this divine man have from his youth.³⁷ 1280

What one man asked the other accepted. He heard this petition of theirs, and tested them for ten days. At the end of the ten days their appearance was good, and they were strong in body by comparison with the youngsters who had been eating the king's fare (vv. 14–15). In other words, the divine prophet gained what he wished, and proved the promises to be true that he had made to the man entrusted with their care: by receipt of divine grace they appeared much better than those in receipt of the royal fare. Amelasar withdrew their food and the wine for drinking, and gave them vegetables (v. 16). The benefit gained was twofold: firstly, he learned that it is possible for the person fasting to acquire bodily health and charm, and next, by taking the food provided for them he was more eager to supply them with the vegetables they wanted.

Then, though he had spoken only of himself, he inevitably brought attention to his fellows in piety in the words, To these four young men God gave understanding and judgment in all matters of letters and wisdom (v. 17): it was not Chaldean education that made them knowledgeable and filled them with all wisdom; rather, by divine grace they were vouchsafed wisdom and understanding and all knowledge, and were shown to be better than anyone. Daniel had understanding of all visions and dreams: from his youth he had divine revelations, not only in dreams but also while awake, and was also able to interpret those revealed to others, as is indicated by he had understanding. Now, we learn from this that the God of all is not in the habit of respecting differences of age, looking instead only for piety and love of God: even if he finds it in the young, he prefers them to many of their elders. You can find him doing the same also in the case of Joseph, and of Samuel the prophet: though very young, he appeared to him and bade him forecast retribution

³⁷ Theodoret is astray in implying the law's dietary requirements forbade consumption of such foods (cf. Exod 21–23; Lev 17–26).

At the end of the time the king had mentioned for bringing them in, the chief eunuch brought them into the presence of Nebuchadnezzar. The king spoke with them, and none of them was found equal to Daniel, Hananiah, Azariah, and Mishael, and they took their place in the king's presence. In every matter of wisdom and understanding on which the king questioned them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and soothsayers in his kingdom (vv. 18–20). Whereas Amelasar knew of the difference in diet, and was completely aware of the power of divine grace, however, the king was probably unaware of it all; after all, how could he have known, when the food was supplied in the usual manner but consumed by Amelasar? Nevertheless, he too gained no little benefit, finding them better than all those chosen from other nations in beauty and bodily stature, wisdom and understanding of soul, fluency in language and all rational understanding. He did not simply make comparisons, however: he put questions to them and used experience to teach him the truth, finding them not simply superior but ten times better; and for the time being he came to realize that Jews were wiser than all other nations.

After saying this, he went on, Daniel was there for one year of King Cyrus (v. 21). It was not without purpose that he added this detail: he wanted to make clear the time of the whole prophecy. This was the reason he conveyed the beginning of the prophetic work and added the end of it, for us to reckon the years between the kingdoms and come to realize the whole period of the prophetic work.³⁹ In addition to this he informs us that he witnessed Cyrus bringing the captivity to an end, and in the present life enjoyed consolation from seeing the release of his kin; it was, you see, in the first year of his reign that Cyrus ordered those Jews who were interested to return to Judah, and restored the divine temple, after being informed by blessed Daniel himself of the prophecy of Isaiah the prophet, who cried out boldly, "He who says to Jerusalem, You will be rebuilt, and to the cities of Judah, You will be in-

³⁹ The year specified is 539–538, which makes Daniel about ninety years of age if he were a young man at the beginning in 606 as mentioned in verse 1. There is also an apparent contradiction involved with "the third year of King Cyrus" in 10:1.

habited; he who tells Cyrus to have good sense, and carry out all my wishes.” “The Lord says this to my anointed Cyrus, whose right hand I have taken, for nations to be obedient before him, and cities will not be shut. For I shall go before you and level mountains; I shall smash doors of bronze and shatter iron bars; | I shall open to you treasures that are in darkness, hidden and unseen.”⁴⁰ When Cyrus learned of this, he granted to those of the Jews who were willing to return to their homeland. The book of Chronicles also informs us of the time: “In the first year of Cyrus king of the Persians, after the fulfillment of the word of the Lord through the mouth of Jeremiah, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of the Persians. Cyrus ordered a proclamation in his whole kingdom in the words of Scripture, Thus says Cyrus king of the Persians: The Lord the God of heaven has given me all the kingdoms of the earth, and he has commanded me to build him a house in Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Whoever is among you of all his people, may the Lord God be with him, and let him go up.”⁴¹

This is the reason blessed Daniel also conveyed the time of the prophecy, recording in the Jews’ writings the statement Daniel was there for one year of King Cyrus. Let us for our part at this point give our reader a rest,⁴² and sing the praises of the good Lord, who strikes and heals, scourges and cures, applies punishment and lovingkindness. To him be glory for ages of ages. Amen.

CHAPTER 2

In the second year of his reign Nebuchadnezzar had a dream, his spirit was perturbed and his sleep left him (v. 1). From this we learn that it was at the very beginning of his reign that he invaded Judah in the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim, ordered tribute to be paid, made prisoners and took them to the country of the Assyrians.⁴³

⁴² Thus closes the first of Theodoret’s τόμοι, for reasons of length. So a brief doxology is in order.

The prophet Jeremiah also confirms the date in speaking in these terms, “The word came to Jeremiah the prophet, to all the people of Judah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim son of Josiah king of Judah, the first year of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon.” So we find | here that after the completion of the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim Nebuchadnezzar came to the throne and launched a campaign against the Jews, whereas it was in the beginning of the fourth year that the prophet Jeremiah in delivering his exhortation to the people said it was King Nebuchadnezzar’s first year. Blessed Daniel, after saying the first captivity happened in the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah, then went on, In the second year of his reign Nebuchadnezzar had a dream, adding this further detail not without purpose, but for us to get a precise grasp of the time as well. This is the reason the divine prophets in mentioning the kings also record the number of years. 1285

So in the second year of his reign Nebuchadnezzar had a dream, his spirit was perturbed and his sleep left him. The king gave orders to summon the magicians, the soothsayers, the sorcerers, and the astrologers⁴⁴ to tell the king his dream (vv. 1–2). God’s designs, then, are clear to people of good sense, his wish being that his own prophet explain his dream so that he might receive sound and salutary advice from it; so on the one hand he alarmed him with the dream, and on the other made him lose remembrance of the dream. But just as the providence of the God of all was obvious, so too the king’s frenzy was clear to all religious people; after all, how could it not be a mark of utter insanity to look from others for a recollection of one’s dream? Yet once called, the text says, they came and stood in the king’s presence. The king said to them, I had a dream, and my spirit is perturbed by the desire to understand it. The astrologers spoke to the king in Aramaic, O king, live forever! Tell your servants the dream, and we shall give its interpretation (vv. 2–4). While the request they made was quite logical, the promise was arrogant: human intuition is incapable of interpreting divine revelations without assistance from on high. Now, the astrologers conducted the dialogue in Aramaic, assembled as they were from a lapse of three years before Daniel gained entrance to the royal court. Inconsistency in biblical authors’ dating is unpalatable to an Antiochene, as is textual emendation.

different nations, and though having their own language in each case, they all used Aramaic in common in their wish to convey a unanimous reply.⁴⁵

Even so, however, they did not dissuade the proud king from seeking help from human beings with things beyond human nature. Immediately the king replied, saying to the astrologers, My decree is this: Unless you tell me of the dream and its interpretation, You will perish, and your houses | will be seized. But if you do tell me of the dream and its interpretation, you will receive presents and gifts and great honor from me. But tell me the dream and its interpretation (vv. 5–6). This demonstrates not only his audacity and ferocity, but also his extreme derangement, it being a mark of utter madness to think that by threats of sanctions or promises of rewards the astrologers would acquire greater knowledge. At once they replied to him, Tell your dream to us all, and we shall let you know its interpretation (v. 7): though we profess obedience, we also recognize the limits of nature; we would be able to interpret the dream if we knew it, but we cannot tell it if it was known to you and then lost in oblivion. 1288

Yet the effort to prevent his seeking a recollection of the dream proved fruitless, the king replying in the words, I know with certainty that you are trying to gain time because you see the decree has been issued by me; so if you do not tell me the dream, there is one verdict for you. I know you have agreed to utter a false and corrupt statement in my presence until opportunity presents itself. Describe the dream to me, and I shall know that you will tell me its interpretation (vv. 8–9). While the demand in these words was high-handed and insane, the accusation was very true: You want to learn what the dream was, he is saying, so as to hatch in common some false interpretation and trick me as usual, using the lapse of time as an advantage and waiting for the moment of fulfillment. On hearing this the astrologers (probably exercising greater forthrightness than the others) then spoke with some force, and completely denied the possibility of a recall of the dream. There is no one on earth, they said, who could explain the matter to the king, because no king, mighty and influential though he be, ever put such a question to ma-

ὃν ὁ βασιλεὺς ἐπερωτᾷ, βαρὺς· καὶ ἕτερος οὐκ ἔστιν, ὃς ἀπαγγελεῖ αὐτὸν ἐνώπιον τοῦ βασιλέως, ἀλλ' ἡ θεοί, ὧν οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ κατοικία μετὰ πάσης σαρκός.» Ὅθεν οὐκ ἐνδέχεται γενέσθαι καθάπερ οἶει. gician or astrologer. The demand the king makes is exorbitant, and there is no one who can explain it in the king's presence except gods, whose dwelling is not with all flesh (vv. 10–11): hence it is not possible for it to happen as you think; look for human things from us, not for what is beyond human nature. After all, to kings it belongs most of all to govern their kingdom fairly, and to ask of their subjects what is possible; but in this case it is not fair of you to ask what you are asking, such knowledge belonging not to human beings clad in flesh | but to the incorporeal nature that has a precise knowledge of everything. 1289

With this statement by the astrologers, then, Daniel's declaration was providentially prepared for: when they claimed, Knowing this is possible not to human beings but to gods, the divinely inspired Daniel recalls the dream to the king and interprets it very precisely and clearly; but he informs the king that such knowledge belongs not to human beings, who crawl on the earth, or even to gods wrongly so-called, but to the God who made everything. Each of these things, however, will have its due comment in its proper place.

At that point, the text says, in a great rage and anger the king gave orders for all the wise men of Babylon to be killed. The decree was issued, and the wise men were on the point of being slain, and they looked for Daniel and his friends to kill them (vv. 12–13).⁴⁶ It was the exploit of a tyrant, not a king, manifestly unjust, and devoid of righteousness: arrogance and conceit outstripped authority and plotted the downfall of the Jewish subjects. On observing this unjust slaughter, however, the most divine Daniel enquired of Arioch, who was entrusted with this cruel slaughter, Lieutenant of the king, why has the shameful policy issued from the king's presence? (v. 15) The reason for his ignorance, in fact, was probably that he had not been invited to the assembly of Babylon's sages, the three years not having passed in which, by the king's order, they were to be nourished on the king's fare and after the specified time be introduced to him. If, on the other hand, his version of the story was that they had been introduced before this and were judged to be better in appearance than the others, let no one be surprised: wanting to bring that story to a conclusion, he conveyed clearly ev-everything that happened at that time, then shifted to another story about what happened in the intervening time. His ignorance of the unjust slaughter actually confirms the fact that to that point he was not part of those who had free access to the king when he assembled the wise men of Babylon, his enquiry to Arioch being made in ignorance of the reason. When he found it out, he was forthright in speaking with the king, and he asked for a little time to be given him for an investigation of the dream and discovery of its interpretation.

He then informs us of the way he discovered it, not out of ambition, but to invite us to a like zeal. Daniel went into his house, and told his friends Hananiah, Azariah and Mishael of this decree. They sought pity from the God of heaven in regard to this mystery lest Daniel and his friends perish along with the rest of | Babylon's sages (vv. 17–18). There is truly a great gap between truth and falsehood: whereas the agents of falsehood are bereft of divine assistance, have recourse only to human ways of thought that are devoid of piety, and say and do everything to deceive people, the disciples of truth cannot bring themselves to say or do anything without help from above; by directing their own petitions under the watchful eye of providence, they stand firm and unruffled, not tossed this way and that, but free of the tempest of human reasoning. As proof of this, the divinely inspired Daniel, though begging for a short time for a way into the dream, did not spend his time simply on human reasoning but on prayer and supplication; and instead of trusting in himself alone, he got his like-minded friends to join him in supplication. 1292

His hope was not disappointed. At that point the mystery was revealed to Daniel in a vision of the night, and Daniel blessed the God of heaven in the words, May the name of the Lord God be blessed from age to age because wisdom and understanding are from him. He changes times and seasons, enthrones kings and dethrones them, giving wisdom to the wise and insight to those with understanding. He it is who reveals deep and hidden things, knowing what is in darkness, and light is with him (vv. 19–22). In everything he reveals his gratitude, not only composing the hymn but making the discovery of the dream the theme of the composition. It is proper, he is saying, constantly to sing the praises of God, who is eternal and everlasting, fount of wisdom and understanding as he is, governing everything correctly and beneficently, proving the instability of human prosperity with the change in circumstances while making very clear to everyone his peculiar power, appointing kings and in turn easily removing them, giving authority and taking it away as he wishes, source of wisdom and insight, giving it not indiscriminately but to those intent on understanding him, revealing as he wishes what has yet to come to light and is still hidden in the depths, as it were, because it has not yet occurred, a light to the mind's eye, dwelling in inaccessible light, knowing precisely everything that occurs in darkness.

Hence to you, O God of my ancestors, I confess and give praise for granting me wisdom and power, and for now making known to me what we asked of you, for making known to me the king's vision | to make known to the king (v. 23). This is what devout souls are like, realizing God is their resource in time of need and taking refuge in him as their haven, refusing after the bestowal of good things to consign to oblivion the memory of his gifts and instead repaying the beneficent God with hymns of praise. Now, it is worth noting this divine man's modesty as well: in making his request he joined with him his like-minded friends in prayer, and in composing the hymn of thanks for what he had received he once more referred to them: he did not say, You made known to me what I asked of you, but what we asked of you. 1293

After thus concluding the hymn to God, Daniel immediately went to Arioch, whom the king had commanded to kill the wise men of Babylon, and said to him, Do not kill the wise men of Babylon; take me into the king's presence, and I shall tell the king the interpretation of the vision (v. 24). It was becoming for the prophet to make this gesture of mercy: far from being interested solely in being spared from unjust slaughter along with his friends, he involves himself also in the safety of the astrologers, hoping through this miracle both to rid them of impiety and to bring them to the God of all. On hearing these words, Arioch eagerly brought Daniel into the presence of the king, and said to him, I have found a man among the captive people of Israel who will tell the king the interpretation (v. 25). Again at this point it becomes clear to us that to this point the king had no experience of Daniel's virtue: had he known him, Arioch would not have spoken in vague terms, I have found a man among the captive people of Israel who will tell the king the interpretation. The king was overjoyed, and said to Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, Are you able to tell me the dream I had and its interpretation? (v. 26).

This, too, should be noted, that he does not always call him Belteshazzar, only when he is speaking to the king, who was the one who gave him the name.

Nevertheless, on being asked if he could tell the king both the dream and its interpretation, he replied as follows, It is not possible for wise men, soothsayers, magicians, diviners to tell the king the mystery of which he asks—only for God in heaven, who reveals mysteries (vv. 27–28). He made a remarkable beginning to his teaching: eliminating the band of those foolish people and laying bare their limitations, he said that God is the instructor in the revelation of mysteries, adding in heaven to eliminate gods made and worshiped here below. | On the one hand, by the use of the singular he eliminates the plurality of the false gods, and on the other by mention of a dwelling in heaven he shows those appearing to be gods here below not to be so but only a deceit that has its basis in human artifice. This is the God who has made known to King Nebuchadnezzar what must happen at the end of time. After making this beginning, he further wins the king's attention in his favor with a blessing: *King, live forever!*⁴⁷ You see, since he was about to tell the dream and go on to mention its interpretation, and foretold to him the destruction of the kingdom, after the beginning he says, My prayer is for you to live always; so do not ascribe to me what is indicated by the dream.

He then says, This, O King, is the dream and the visions in your head on your bed, meaning, This is what you saw at night. Your thoughts of what must happen later came down on your bed (v. 29): you were thinking as you lay on your bed whether you would live forever or fall under death's power by the law for human beings; and you longed to know as well what had not yet happened. The one who reveals mysteries made known to you what must happen. At all points he proclaims the one God so as to eliminate the error of polytheism. He then makes clear also the modesty of his own attitude. It is not through any wisdom in me beyond all living people that this mystery has been revealed to me, but for the purpose of making known the interpretation to the king, and for you to know the reasonings of your heart (v. 30): I was granted this revelation, not that I am wiser than all human beings, but for you to learn what you desired to learn; he employed me, his servant as I am, as minister of this knowledge.

He begins the explanation, therefore, and speaks first of the dream itself. You were gazing, O King, and lo, a single image, mighty, a huge image of marvelous appearance, standing tall before you, its impact fearsome. The image had a head of pure gold, its hands, breast and arms of silver, its belly and thighs of bronze, its legs of iron, feet partly of iron and partly of clay (vv. 31–33). In the foregoing he indicated four kinds of material—gold, silver, bronze and iron—clay being mentioned not by itself but mixed with iron. Now, in these things he is referring to the great and far-flung kingdoms which succeeded one another in controlling most of the world. While obviously other kingdoms existed, and exist to this day, they cannot actually be seen to control all or most people |, only one or two nations. So he means that the rule of the Assyrians was the first of them all to come into being, which is the same as the Babylonians, both one and the other being Assyrians; at one time they had their palace in Nin, which is called Nineveh in Hebrew, at another time in Babylon. The fact that the kingdom of both former and latter is one the prophet also actually confirms by saying in interpreting the dream You are the head of gold, O King (v. 38). The blessed prophet Jeremiah also says, “Babylon was a golden cup in the Lord’s hand, intoxicating all the earth, nations drank of her wine; hence they tottered, and Babylon suddenly fell and was smashed to pieces.”⁴⁸ If, on the other hand, the kingdom of the Assyrians was another one than this and older than it, what sort of material would he have assigned to it? The most divine Moses also confirms that this is the way things are: when in Genesis ⁴⁹ he refers to Nimrod to the effect that “he was a mighty hunter before the Lord,” he went on, “The beginning of his kingdom was Babylon, Erech, and Calneh.”⁵⁰ Profane historians call the Babylonians

⁴⁸ Jer 51:7–8, cited doubtless because of the mention of a golden cup, though in Jeremiah’s case the gold suggests not priority but luxury.

⁴⁹ Theodoret here calls Genesis Κοσμογένεια, with Diodore calling it Κοσμοποιία and Theodore Κτίσις.

μέχρι δὲ τοῦ παρόντος Ἀσσυρίαν αὐτὴν ὀνομάζουσι Πέρσαι. Οὐκοῦν ἡ μὲν πρώτη ὕλη, ἥτις ἐστὶν ὁ χρυσός, τὴν Ἀσσυρίων καὶ Βαβυλωνίων σημαίνει βασιλείαν· κεφαλὴν δὲ αὐτὴν ὀνομάζει, ὡς πρώτην γεγεννημένην· ἡ δευτέρα δέ, ἥτις ἐστὶν ὁ ἄργυρος, ἡ Περσῶν ἐστὶ καὶ Μήδων. Κῦρος γὰρ ἑκατέρωθεν ὀρμώμενος, μητρόθεν μὲν ἐκ Μήδων, πατρώθεν δὲ ἐκ Περσῶν, κατέλυσε μὲν Ἀσσυρίων, εἵτουν Βαβυλωνίων, τὴν βασιλείαν, μετατέθεικε δὲ τὴν βασιλείαν εἰς Πέρσας. Τοιοῦτος δὲ ὁ παρὼν βίος, οὐδὲν ἔχων διαρκές, οὐδὲ μόνιμον· διὸ καὶ ὁ μακάριος Παῦλος ἐβόα, ὅτι «Παράγει τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου.» Καὶ

Assyrians, and up to the present time Persians call it Assyria.

The first material, gold, therefore refers to the kingdom of the Assyrians and Babylonians; he calls it head as being the first. The second, silver, is that of the Persians and Medes, Cyrus stemming from both, on his mother's side from the Medes, on his father's side from the Persians, and destroying the kingdom of the Assyrians, or Babylonians, and transferring the kingdom to the Persians. He called him breast and arms to bring out the relationship to two nations, by the right arm suggesting the paternal race, by the left the maternal, which the breast is given the task of connecting, containing as it does the heart, the seat of thought, while by thought marriage agreements are arranged.⁵¹ Bronze is the name he gave the Macedonian kingdom, which likewise controlled them all after the disappearance of the Persian; he ascribed to it a belly and thighs, referring to the monarchy of Alexander by mention of belly, and by thighs the division of the kingdom that happened after his death. By iron he referred to the Roman kingdom; it succeeded to the Macedonian, and he ascribes to it legs as being extremities of the whole body and capable of carrying the whole body. The soles of the feet are also of iron, but mixed with clay. Now, in this he is not referring to another kingdom but to the same one, that would be weaker than itself | and mixed with the weakness of clay. 1300

Now, he cited the different kinds of materials to bring out a difference, not in esteem but in strength, silver being denser than gold, bronze more solid than silver, and iron to a far greater degree being firmer than bronze. So the difference is not in esteem but in strength and power. Now, the question must be asked, why did he see in an image a combination of these materials? Nothing is revealed by the God of all idly and to no purpose. An image has form, not substance; the present life is like that, having nothing permanent about it, nothing lasting—hence the cry of blessed Paul, too, “The form of this world is passing away,” and elsewhere gave pride of place to Babylon, a notion he and his peers adopted.

⁵¹ We saw Theodoret inheriting the Hellenistic amalgamation of Assyria and Babylonia; and for this interpretation he also accepts the traditional combination of Medes and Persians as the second member of the series of four empires, the Macedonian and Roman being the remaining two. It is clear, however, from Daniel's interpretation of the four beasts in chapter 7 that the four kingdoms are rather those of the Babylonians, Medes, Persians, and Greeks.

Παρὰ Κυρίου ἐγένετο αὕτη, καὶ ἔστι

he says by way of exhortation, “Do not be conformed to this age.” And blessed David says to prove the futility of human prosperity, “Yet everything is futility, every living person.”⁵² Of course, in an image a person goes his way, stores things up, without knowing for whom he is amassing them. So, since the present life also experiences rapid changes (all visible things being mortal, impermanent, passing), and an image does not enjoy the operation of substance, but brings out only the forms of kingdoms, rulers and subjects, and in addition to this it has a form that easily dissolves, the God of all in his wish to instruct that arrogant king in the futility of human conceit and teach him that human affairs are easily subject to change was justified in bringing that image to him in a dream and itemizing its parts in the materials. He wanted to convey succession of kings and to persuade everyone that he alone has unceasing control, without beginning and without end, and a kingdom that is absolutely eternal.

After this blessed Daniel proceeds to convey the rest of the dream. You kept gazing and saw how a stone was hewn out of a mountain without hands being used, and it struck the image on its iron and clay feet, and smashed them to pieces. Then the iron, the clay, the bronze, the silver, the gold were crushed in one go and became like dust from a threshing floor in summer. The wind carried them away, and no trace of them was found. The stone that struck the mountain became a huge mountain, and filled the whole earth (vv. 34–35). Such was the end of the dream; we must begin the interpretation starting at the end. So let us enquire first who is given the name stone, seeming first to be small, later shown to be immense and covering the whole world. Let us listen, then, to God himself speaking through the prophet Isaiah, “Lo, I put in Sion a precious stone, a corner stone, honorable, special, as its foundation; anyone | believing in it will not be ashamed.”⁵³ Let us listen also to blessed David prophesying in a loud cry, “The stone which the builders rejected has become the cornerstone.”⁵⁴ Christ the Lord himself in the sacred Gospels also cited this text to Jews, “Did you not read the text, The stone which the builders rejected has become the cornerstone. It was done by the Lord, and is a marvel in our eyes?”⁵⁵ Blessed Peter preaching among the Jews and focusing on the prophecy of the Lord says, “He is the stone despised by you the builders, which has become the cornerstone.”⁵⁶ Blessed Paul says, “Built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, with Jesus Christ himself as a cornerstone;” and elsewhere he says, “No one can lay any foundation stone other than the one laid, which is Jesus Christ”; and again, “They drank from the spiritual rock that followed them, and the rock was Christ.”⁵⁷

So we learn from Old and New Testament that our Lord Jesus Christ was called stone: it was cut from a mountain without hands being used, being born of a virgin independently of marital intercourse.⁵⁸ Now, the divine Scripture is in the habit of calling preternatural birth “quarrying”: in reminding Jews of the begetting of children that happened preternaturally in Abraham’s case, Isaiah said, “Look to the solid rock from which you were quarried.”⁵⁹ So mountain means the Davidic tribe, and stone Christ in his humanity, not hewn according to the law of nature: formerly insignificant in appearance on account of the nature with which he was invested, he was suddenly shown to be a mighty mountain, filling the whole world. “The whole world was filled with the knowledge of God,” Scripture says, remember, “like a great volume of water covering the seas.”⁶⁰ He it is who will strike the image in its feet of clay and iron, that is, he will bring the last kingdom to an end, and make it futile and evanescent: far from any other kingdom succeeding it, he will reveal his own one and make ⁵⁷ Eph 2:20; 1 Cor 3:11; 10:4.

⁵⁸ The symbolism of the stone Theodoret takes in the light of many Old Testament and New Testament references, as he will do in a similar exercise when he comes to comment on Ps 118:22 in his Psalms commentary. For Daniel the stone is the kingdom that God will establish, that will outlast all other kingdoms; the Old Testament elsewhere uses a similar image, as in Isa and Ps 118, for God’s people. In the New Testament the sense of the stone passes from the theocratic kingdom to the king himself, Jesus. The reference to the virgin birth, made here and in commentary on the verse in Psalms, Theodoret doubtless gets from another source (none so far acknowledged; cf. note 65 below).

it obvious to everyone, and will even wipe out the very memory of all those kingdoms like dust stirred up from the threshing floor and scattered by the wind.

Having thus described the whole dream to the king, he went on, This is the dream and we shall give its interpretation in the presence of the king. You, O King, king of kings (vv. 36–37). He said this, not by way of flattery, | but employing a customary title; after all, 1304 he had power over all rulers of nations, all who were called king. You, O King, king of kings, to whom the God of heaven has given a kingdom mighty and powerful and honorable in every place: it is not from human power that you have prevailed over all, but from the God who has the heavenly kingdom, who gave you this authority for you to lead and reign over people living in every place wherever humankind dwells; he gave the beasts of the field and the birds of the sky into your hand, and set you as lord of all. He refers to the barbarians who live in the wildest fashion as wild beasts (v. 28), and as birds to those endowed with understanding, more elevated than other people and uplifted in mind. He means that he made you king of everything. So you are the head of gold, that is, your kingdom (referring not to the person but to the kingdom: after his death Evil-merodach reigned over the Babylonians, and after him Belshazzar).⁶¹ If, on the other hand, he referred to him in person in saying You are the head of gold, how are we to take the statement After you will arise a kingdom inferior to yours (v. 39)? He does not mean the kingdom of his sons, only the Persian one. So the head of gold is not Nebuchadnezzar personally, but the whole kingdom of the Assyrians (or Babylonians).

And after you will arise a kingdom inferior to yours, that is, the Persian; he calls it inferior, not in the sense of weaker, but as coming second. And a third kingdom, of bronze, which will dominate the whole earth. He means the Macedonian: Alexander son of Philip gained control the whole earth, subjecting all people in his reign of twelve years. And there will be fourth kingdom, strong as iron:

just as iron crushes and tames everything, so it will crush and tame everything (v. 40). He refers to the Roman Empire, which was the strongest and, so to say, prevailed over all the nations, taking tribute and taxes from all; he used crush and tame of it in reference to the submission, good order, and the rule of law.⁶² And as you saw its feet and toes were partly iron and partly clay; it will be another, divided kingdom, and some of the strength of iron will be in it in the way you saw the iron mixed with potter's clay (v. 41). He used other not in respect of quantity but in respect of | the quality of power: 1305 if he had meant in respect of quantity, other would have meant it was a fifth kingdom, as he had already referred to a third and a fourth. Since, however, he knew the final stages of the iron kingdom would be weaker, he used other on account of the weakness, and rightly so: he had shown it to be by far the strongest initially, its early stages being like that, whereas (he means) not even its final stages will be completely weak.⁶³ Some of the strength of the iron will be in it in the way you saw the iron mixed with potting clay. And the toes of the feet were partly iron and partly clay (vv. 41–42). This does not call for comment from us: the prophet himself gives the interpretation in saying A part of the kingdom will be strong, and will be crushed by it.

After this he proceeds, As you saw the iron mixed with potter's clay, they will be mixed in human offspring (v. 43). This it is in particular that brings out that this is no different kingdom from the iron one, only the same one in a weaker condition, part of it being strong and part of it weak; a bond of kinship will connect the weak part with the strong, suggested by the phrase they will be mixed in human offspring. He is saying, There will be a mingling and intermarriage of the one and the other, but discord will spoil the rights of kinship: the one will not be attached to the other (he is saying), just as iron does not mix with clay.

While we for our part have thus understood the meaning of the divinely inspired Daniel, therefore, we ought also give attention to the views of some commentators before us, which is the way for the truth to be demonstrated more obviously.⁶⁴ Some historians, then, claim that the fourth kingdom—namely, the iron one—is Alexander the Macedonian; its feet and the toes of the feet were a mixture of iron and clay—namely, the Macedonians ruling after him, successors of Ptolemy, Seleucus, Antiochus, and Demetrius, some holding a weak grasp on power, others a very vigorous grasp, contracting intermarriage and being involved in relationships with one another. Now, they should understand, firstly, that he said the head of gold was Nebuchadnezzar, that is, the kingdom of the Babylonians (or, if you like, Assyrians). The kingdom of the Persians and Medes together succeeded to that, Cyrus being from both races, and while ruling the one and the other he destroyed the kingdom of the Babylonians and gained control of the Persians. The Persians' kingdom, the second, Alexander the Macedonian destroyed, and blessed Daniel declared he dominated the whole earth, calling it the third kingdom. There was no other than that of the Romans to succeed to it. They need, | therefore, 1308 to understand and grasp from the numbering and from the factors outlined that the third kingdom, of bronze, is that of the Macedonians, and the fourth, of iron, is that of the Romans.

If, on the other hand, they even judged this to be definitely more obscure, they should at least have discerned the prediction from the conclusion: as soon as he pointed out the weakness of the iron kingdom's clay extremity, he went on, And in the days of those kingdoms, namely, the clay and iron ones that intermingled and contracted a relationship with each other without this resulting in harmony. The God of heaven will raise up a kingdom that will never be destroyed, and this kingdom will not be left to another people. It will smash and scatter all the kingdoms, and it will stand forever, in the way you saw that a stone was hewn from a mountain without hands being used, and it smashed the clay, the iron, the bronze, the silver and the gold (vv. 44–45). Now, this clearly demonstrates the

Ὁ γὰρ ἤδη πρότερον τμηθεὶς λίθος ἄνευ χειρῶν, καὶ γενόμενος εἰς ὄρος μέγα, καὶ τὴν οἰκουμένην καλύψας, οὗτος ἐν τῇ δευτέρᾳ παρουσίᾳ πατάξει τὴν εἰκόνα ἐπὶ τοὺς πόδας τοὺς ὀστρακίνους, τουτέστιν, ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ τέλει τῆς σιδηρᾶς φανήσεται βασιλείας, ἀσθενοῦς ἤδη γεγεννημένης· end of present realities, and the unending character of the heavenly kingdom: with the iron kingdom being in a weak condition and the clay one being intermingled, there will appear a stone hewn without hands being used, and it will smash the clay, the iron, the bronze, the silver, and the gold, will bring them to naught; it will be without successors, eternal, and will provide to those worthy an unending kingdom. It will never be destroyed, the text says, and it will not be left to another people; it will smash and tame all the kingdoms, and will itself stand forever.

If, on the other hand, there are those who are uncomfortable with this and prefer not to have it this way, they need to prove what human exploit is eternal and what human kingdom has no end: it is silly and quite absurd, on the one hand, to be awaiting a consummation of the present age and, on the other, to claim that some kingdom in the present life is unending. Now, if it is agreed even by them that in these words an indication is given of a kingdom that will be given by God to the worthy, then it was not the Macedonian kingdom he called iron: the present life did not come to an end when that was in power—instead, the Roman one destroyed the Macedonian and took over the helm of the whole world. If, on the other hand, they claim that the first coming of the Lord is suggested in these words, let them show that the governance of the Romans was terminated immediately after the appearance of our Savior; on the contrary, in fact, it is easy to find that quite the opposite is the case, that it held power and was not terminated at the very moment of the birth of the Savior. Augustus, in fact, was reigning when the Lord's birth occurred, the second to come | to the throne, and so to say he made subjects of all people and “had the whole world registered,”⁶⁵ in the words of the Gospels, and required tribute to be given. The Roman kingdom remained in power under him, and has lasted even to this day. If, then, the first coming of the Lord did not overturn the governance of the Romans, it therefore follows that we see a reference to his second coming: he is the stone already first hewn without use of hands, turning into a huge mountain and covering the world, and at his second coming he will strike the image on its clay feet—that is, he will appear at the very end of the iron kingdom, already rendered weak. He will destroy all governing powers, consign them to a kind of oblivion, and provide his eternal kingdom for the worthy.

Having given this interpretation of these things, Daniel naturally proceeded, The mighty God made known to the king what must happen after this. The dream is true, and its interpretation trustworthy. Now, it is worth admiring the care of the God of all for all people: he does not deprive of his providence even those living in godlessness. Instead, he grants them every attention as well, just as of course he did not leave neglected this cruel and godless foreigner: firstly, by means of the revelations he shows him the impermanence of the prosperity of the present life and the rapid decline of the kingdom itself, and the fact that human felicity, far from being lasting, fades and disappears like flowers and lilies. This was sufficient to repress his arrogant and conceited attitude, and to persuade him to think in human terms and expect the end of life and reign. Firstly, then, in this he shows his care; then by his forgetting the dream he proves the falsity of the soothsayers and astrologers, shows the truth of his own servants, revealing his divine power in the wisdom of his servants, and draws the ignorant to worship of him—or, rather, he obliges those who require worship from everyone to worship his holy servants.

The story informs us of this. Then King Nebuchadnezzar fell on his face and worshiped Daniel, and he gave orders for a grain offering and incense to be offered to him (v. 46). Think how great a thing this was for that proud and demented man, who considered himself even to be God (God telling him through another prophet, remember, “You are man, not God”)⁶⁶ and made all people his subjects, to worship this Jewish prisoner, serving in the role of a slave, and to think that in him he was worshiping his God—hence his | offering him a grain offering and incense, that is, he gave instructions for him to be offered a censer with frankincense. Now, in this the story suggests that he gave orders to those thought to be priests to do this: the person worshiping would always offer incense as well if he normally served as priest. But since it was quite appropriate for others, he personally would not venture to do what should not to be done, instead giving orders to those accustomed to do it. And lest he seem to be worshiping a human being to no purpose, he says to Daniel, In truth this God of yours is God of gods and Lord of kings, the one who reveals mysteries, because you were able to reveal this mystery (v. 47). The governor of all things brought him so much benefit both from the dream and from the forgetting of the dream: firstly, he discovered his own worthlessness; next, he came to know the weakness of the gods worshiped by him, and as well he was instructed in the operations of the true God—hence his cry, In truth this God of yours is God of gods and Lord of kings, the one who reveals mysteries. Now, he does not call him God of gods according to the thinking of the divine Scripture: while the divine Scripture gives the name gods to those thought worthy of priesthood (“You shall not revile gods, or speak evil of the leader of your people,” Scripture says, remember),⁶⁷ he called the idols gods, not yet completely able to grasp their weakness. Yet he had come to appreciate the difference; hence he called the God of all God of Gods and Lord of kings.

After making this profession, he extolled Daniel, gave him many gifts, and set him over the whole country of Babylon, chief of satraps and over all the wise men of Babylon (v. 48). This, too, is a mark of divine care: the godliness of the ruler brings very great benefit to his subjects, as the Lord did also in the case of Joseph. Blessed David, in treating more concisely of him and singing the praises of divine providence, says, “He sent someone ahead of them, Joseph was sold as a slave”; then, after listing the adversities that befell him and mentioning his imprisonment and bondage, he went on, “The king sent, the leader of the people released him and let him go, and appointed him lord of his house and ruler of his possessions to train his rulers like himself and make his elders wise.”⁶⁸ Here, too, the governor of all things acted likewise: after appointing thrice-blessed Daniel chief of satraps | and Babylon’s wise men, he proposed him as a model of piety and other virtues.

Nevertheless the prophet could not bring himself to enjoy this prominence on his own: he made his fellows in prayer sharers also in prominence. He petitioned the king, and he set Shadrach,

Meshach, and Abednego over all the works of the country of Babylon, and Daniel was in the king's court (v. 49). This accords also with the teaching of the apostle, "There now remain faith, hope, love, these three, but the greatest of all is love."⁶⁹ In other words, this divine prophet loved God with his whole heart, his whole soul, his whole strength, and his whole power;⁷⁰ and since he loved ardently, he believed sincerely; and since he believed sincerely, he hoped to gain help from him; and on attaining what he hoped for, he manifested love for his neighbor and made his fellows sharers in what he had received. Now, "all that was recorded was recorded for our instruction, so that by perseverance and the encouragement of the Scriptures we might have hope,"⁷¹ in Christ Jesus, to whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit be glory, for ages of ages. Amen.

CHAPTER 3

In the eighteenth year of his reign King Nebuchadnezzar made a golden statue, and set it up on the plain of Dura in the country of Babylon (v. 1). Our good and loving Lord, being maker and creator, wants "all people to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth," and "wishes not the death of sinners so much as their being converted and living."⁷² For this reason he brings about everything for the sake of our salvation. On the other hand, those suffering from insensitivity and in thrall to the incurable ailment | of arrogance reap no benefit from the divine remedies, resembling instead sick people resisting the treatment offered them by medical science, addicted to severe licentiousness and intemperance, and daily aggravating the ailment afflicting them.

This was what the proud king was like. The God of all had exercised lovingkindness without limit, had proposed to him treatment for his countless acts of lawlessness and impiety, and had shown him evidence of the impermanence and futility of present prosperity and the exaltation and fame coming from virtue in rendering illustrious the captives obliged to carry the yoke of slavery. At the outset the king admired the prophet's wisdom, and professed belief that his God is the God of all; but with the passage of a brief space of time he returned to his former self, like a dog to his vomit, as the divine Scripture says.⁷³ He made a golden statue, sixty cubits high and six cubits wide, set it up on level ground so that it reared above all alike and similarly was visible to all, and bade it be worshiped by all his subjects. Now, this form of arrogance, far from being without implication, was openly hostile and hateful to God: since God had revealed to him in a dream a mighty image made of four materials, and in this had indicated to him the succession of four kingdoms, he set his own conceit in opposition to God and made a statue, personally giving it dimensions as huge as human skill could attain. Instead of making it this time of gold, silver, bronze and iron, he made it of a single material, gold, this wretch thinking to prove God's prophecies false. Since blessed Daniel in interpreting the dream had said he was the head of gold—that is, the kingdom of the Babylonians (or, if you like, Assyrians)—whereas the other parts of the image succeeding to the head were of other materials, he for his part made the statue completely of gold.

⁷¹ Rom 15:4. The closure of the second chapter is marked by a brief doxology that emerged after fierce debate in the preceding century. It reads literally, "... in Christ Jesus, with whom to the Father be glory together with the Holy Spirit, for ages of ages. Amen." The same doxology concludes chapters 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, and 12.

He assembled all the satraps, prefects, generals, local officials, leaders, tyrants, those in authority and all the rulers of the land to the dedication of the statue which King Nebuchadnezzar had set up (v. 2). Each of these suggests his extreme arrogance: far from gathering together to the festival for the statue some chance members of his subjects, he assembled local officials and generals, those entrusted with government of the satrapies and any other kind of control | 1317 in use among them.⁷⁴ Although at the outset the invitation was thought to be without implication, later the imperious nature of the invitation was detected: when all were assembled, the text goes on, the herald cried out with force (that is, in a loud voice), You are told, nations, peoples, tribes, tongues, that when you hear the sound of the trumpet, pipe, lyre, sambuca, harp, bagpipe, and every kind of musical instrument, fall down and worship the golden statue that King Nebuchadnezzar set up. Whoever does not fall down and worship will at that very hour will be cast into the furnace blazing with fire (vv. 4–5). In this way the wretch, as he thought, arrogated to himself divine honor: far from it being sufficient for him to be worshiped by his subjects, he legislated for this worship to be offered also to the statue. While he astonished everyone with the material, the skill, and the size of the statue, and charmed and seduced them with the varied sound of the musical instruments,⁷⁵ he terrified with the threat of the furnace those not impressed even by the size of the statue or won over by the pleasant sound of the instruments. In all these requirements he did not fail in his purpose: he observed everyone doing his bidding, accustomed as they were to serving fearfully and gladly. Only those thrice-blessed young men Hananiah, Azariah and Mishael kept unalloyed their ancestral nobility even in slavery, refusing to pay worship.

They did not, however, escape the notice of the astrologers in their addiction to godlessness, who wanted to make everyone partners in their impiety. So immediately they approached the king and reminded him of the law passed publicly, ordering all the subjects to worship the statue and threatening with the furnace those who declined to do so. They informed on those sacred men in these terms, There are Jewish men whom you appointed over the works of the country of Babylon, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego; those men did not obey your decree, O King (v. 12). In this they both betrayed their own envy and inflamed the anger of the king by such suggestions, as if to say, Observe who it is you preferred to us, who it is to whom you entrusted governance of the Babylonians. They refused to take account of the greatness of the honor or be grateful to one who honored them, instead making the greatness of the honor an occasion for dishonor by publicly opposing your laws and refusing to discharge your decree. Their overbearing and ungrateful attitude can be perceived not only from this, however: it can be learned also from other indications that they do nothing befitting subjects. In fact, what you believe to be gods they do not, nor | do they offer due adoration to the gods worshiped by you; and they

Τούτων ἀκούσας ὁ φρενοβλαβῆς ἐκεῖνος βασιλεύς, καὶ ἐπιλαθόμενος τῶν ὑπ' αὐτοῦ πρὸς τὸν Δανιὴλ εἰρημένων, « Ἐπ' ἀληθείας ὁ Θεὸς ὑμῶν οὗτός ἐστι Θεὸς τῶν θεῶν, καὶ Κύριος τῶν βασιλέων, » ἄγει τοὺς ἄνδρας εἰς μέσον· πυνθάνεται δέ, εἰ τῷ ὄντι κοινωνεῖν αὐτῷ τῆς τῶν θεῶν οὐκ ἐθέλουσι θεραπείας, καὶ τῆς εἰκόνης φεύγουσι τὴν προσκύνησιν. Προγονικὰ δὲ αὐτῷ τὰ τοιαῦτα τολμήματα· καὶ γὰρ ὁ Σενναχωρεῖμ ἐκεῖνος στρατεία μεγίστη κατὰ τῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ χρησάμενος, ἐπιστέλλων τῷ Ἐζεκίᾳ τοιαῦτα ἐφθέγγετο· « Μὴ σε ἀπατάτω ὁ Θεός σου, ἐφ' ᾧ σὺ πέποιθας ἐπ' αὐτῷ, ὅτι ῥύσεται Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐκ τῶν χειρῶν μου. Μὴ ἐρρύσαντο θεοὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν ἕκαστος τὴν ἑαυτοῦ χώραν ἐκ χειρὸς μου; ποῦ ὁ θεὸς Ἑμᾶθ, καὶ ποῦ ὁ θεὸς Ἀρφάθ, καὶ ποῦ ὁ θεὸς τῆς πόλεως Σεπφάριμ; μὴ ἡδυνήθησαν ῥύσασθαι Σαμάρειαν ἐκ χειρὸς μου, ὅτι ῥύσεται Κύριος τὴν Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐκ χειρὸς μου; » Ἄλλ' εὐθὺς καὶ παραχρῆμα ἔλαβε τῆς βλασφημίας τὰ ἐπίχειρα, καὶ αἱ πολλαὶ μὲν ἐκεῖναι μυριάδες ὑφ' ἐνὸς ἀνηρέθησαν ἀγγέλου· αὐτὸς δὲ φυγών, καὶ τὴν ἐνεργοῦσαν καταλαβών, σφαγέας οὓς ἐγέννησεν, ἔσχηκεν. openly refuse worship to the statue which all the subjects have offered.

On hearing this, that deranged king forgot what had been said by him to Daniel, "In truth your God is God of gods and Lord of kings." He brought the men into the open and enquired whether they really refused to give him a share in the worship of the gods and shunned worshipping the statue. Then he urged and advised them to do, instilling terror with the threat of fire: If you do not worship, at this very hour you will be cast into the furnace blazing with fire (v. 15). Then he committed that unspeakably wild blasphemy, Who is the god who will deliver you out of my hands? So rapidly did he blaspheme against the one in whom he had professed belief, the one he had called God of gods he presumed was weaker even than a human being, and the one he had named Lord of kings the wretch was hot-headed enough to think he had vanquished.

Now, such awful presumption was hereditary: the infamous Sennacherib directed a mighty army against Jerusalem, and sent an ambassador to Hezekiah to utter such things: "Do not let your God in whom you trust deceive you into supposing that he will save Jerusalem from my hand. Surely gods of the nations in each case did not save their country from my hand? Where is the god of Hamath, the god of Arpad, the god of Sepharvaim? Surely they were not able to save Samaria from my hand to give you grounds for thinking the Lord will save Jerusalem from my hand?"⁷⁶ As soon as he embarked on his blasphemous exploit, however, those countless hordes were immediately slain by a single angel, while he fled, reached his own country, and had for executioners those whom he had begotten:⁷⁷ the words he directed against the creator were fulfilled in his execution by people he had begotten.

Not even the example of this man kept in check the tongue of Nebuchadnezzar, however, nor did the dream indicating the succession of kingdoms teach him restraint; instead, he continued to rage against his maker. Against him, by contrast, God sent in vengeance not an angel, as he did in the case of that fellow Sennacherib, but three young captives forced to live in a foreign land, pressed into service at this early age, in the very springtime of their lives. Immediately on hearing of this insane rage and blasphemy, in fact, they were filled with anger and zeal, and replied by saying to the king, We have no need to make a reply to you on this matter (v. 16): it is unnecessary for an enquiry on your part to be brought against us; the attitude we had before is still our attitude now, and we have undergone no change as a result of your threats. | Our God in heaven, whom we serve, is able to deliver us from the furnace blazing with fire, and will rescue us from your hands, O King (v. 17) 1321 Who in their right minds would not be struck by the courage of these blessed young people, their wisdom, their piety, their righteous attitude to the laws, their good sense in every respect? I mean, their not being daunted by that awful tyrant, who was at odds with all people, so to say, or by that mighty pyre, which was not only presented to them as a threat in word but also set before their eyes, confirms their courage to have been more unbending than steel. What a marvelous degree of righteousness emerges from their placing more importance on the divine laws than on the present life! Their directing no insolent words to the king or shaming their race in fear proclaims their self-control, while their piety in contrast to the impious and blasphemous words proclaims their good sense and wisdom: when he said Who is the god who will deliver you out of my hands? they cried aloud Our God in heaven, whom we serve, is able to deliver us from the furnace blazing with fire, and will rescue us from your hands, O King. Do not think our God is like your gods: you are right to despise them, owing their existence to materials and artistry, whereas ours, God of heaven and earth, and creator of everything, has power which is revealed in visible things, a power over them which by the uninitiated in divine things is not easily observed. He it is we serve, and look to him for help, capable as he is of freeing us both from your hands and from the furnace of fire you have prepared.

What is said after this surpasses the bounds of courage and love of God: after saying Our God in heaven, whom we serve, is able to deliver us from the furnace blazing with fire and to rescue us from your hands, O King, they immediately went on, If not, let it be known to you, O King, that we will not serve your gods and worship the golden statue that you set up (v. 18): far from serving our Lord for payment, we are motivated by affection and longing, and at the same time prefer the service of our God to everything. Hence, instead of asking for relief from the troubles unconditionally, we embrace the Lord's planning and providence; and without knowledge of what will be of benefit, we leave the helm to the pilot, no matter what he wishes, understanding clearly that he is able to free us from the threatened evils. Whether he wishes to do so, we do not know; but we leave it to him, wise governor as he is, and accept his verdict, confident that it is to our benefit. Whether he rescues us or not, therefore, we shun worship of your statue and your gods. | Your contest is with souls of such caliber: whatever way 1324 you choose to engage us, you will neither win us over with compliments nor deter us with threats; our God is the most loved and the most fearsome of all. What could be more elevated than these words? To them it is appropriate to apply that apostolic dictum, "We do not know how to pray as we ought."⁷⁸

That savage and most insane tyrant, however, was so filled with rage as to betray his soul's dismay on his face. He bade the furnace be heated more than usual, ordered the holy men be bound, and to prevent there being any delay in their punishment by removal of clothing and footwear, he commanded they be consigned to the fire with these as well, namely, with their sarabaras, tiaras, and leggings (v. 21). Now, sarabara is a kind of Persian garment, tiaras coverings for the head, and leggings refers to what are called trousers, or leathers worn outside, or leather sandals.⁷⁹ Thus bound, the holy men were consigned to the fire; for his part he ordered them to be incinerated for the sake of rapidity and speed. But divine grace arranged for a further mystery to ensue from this: whereas as usual the fire naturally dissolved the iron bonds restraining them, the garments that would normally be easily burned it kept intact; and while the flames consumed the holy men's accusers, ministers of the impious command, standing outside, it was unable to get near the holy ones themselves, instead turning its back on those inside and advancing on its own worshipers, as though calling them to account on behalf of those serving the Lord.

The spokesmen of godliness inside enjoyed such security and attention that they walked on the coals as though on roses of a kind. They walked about in the middle of the fire singing God's praises and blessing the Lord (v. 24). This highlights the eminence of their sound values: far from asking for release from their fate, they sang the praises of the one who had thus controlled their situation and allowed them this excellent confession. Now, it is possible to see the old resembling the new: when the blessed apostles Peter and John had been ill-treated by the party of the Pharisees, they went out rejoicing that they had been thought worthy to be dishonored for the name of Jesus.⁸⁰ The most divine Paul along with Silas, after that ill-treatment inflicted on them by the officials in Philippi, were confined to prison and bound in shackles, but at midnight (the text says) "they prayed and sang God's praises."⁸¹ Likewise these blessed | young people moving to and fro in the furnace, too, 1325 celebrated by continuing to compose the divine hymn.

Firstly, Azariah became their spokesman, and surrounded by the billowing flames, he opened his mouth in the midst of the fire and said, Blessed are you, Lord, God of our fathers, your name is to be praised and glorified for ever (v. 26).⁸² Who could worthily admire the wisdom of the introduction! It is not in good fortune and prosperity, nor in life's steady progress, that he sings the praises of the God of all, but in such an awful furnace. He called him God of the fathers, bringing out his modest attitude and proclaiming the virtue of the fathers: We sing your praises, Lord, he is saying, we who have as our fathers those whose God you wished to be called, saying to your servant Moses, "I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob."⁸³ This name of yours is to be praised and glorified, not in one instance and at a specified time, but for all ages. Because you are righteous in all you have done for us (v. 27): we sing your praises, knowing as we do the righteousness of your judgment; you exercised a right and proper verdict in ordering that we be enslaved and left far from our own homeland. All your works are true and your ways straight. All your judgments are true; you made truthful judgments in all you inflicted on us, even against the holy city of our fathers, Jerusalem, because it was in truth and justice that you inflicted all this on us for our sins (vv. 27–28). All the words have the same sense, but he brought out the same meaning in different ways, praising God’s righteous judgment and allowing no room for ingratitude.

Καὶ πᾶσαι αἱ κρίσεις σου ἀληθιναί, καὶ κρίματα ἀληθείας ἐποίησας, κατὰ πάντα ἃ ἐπήγαγες ἡμῖν, καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγίαν τὴν τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, ὅτι ἐν ἀληθείᾳ καὶ κρίσει ἐπήγαγες ταῦτα πάντα ἐφ' ἡμᾶς διὰ τὰς ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν.» Τὴν αὐτὴν μὲν διάνοιαν ἅπαντα ἔχει τὰ εἰρημένα· διαφόρως δὲ αὐτὰ εἴρηκε, τὴν δικαίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ κρίσιν ὑμῶν, καὶ χώραν οὐδεμίαν τῇ ἀχαριστίᾳ διδούς. Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ τῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ μνημονεύσας, καὶ ἁγίαν αὐτὴν ὀνομάσας, καὶ τῶν πατέρων ἐκείνων τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν πόλιν προσαγορεύσας, εὐθύς τὴν τῆς τιμωρίας αἰτίαν ἐπήγαγε·

Hence, after his reference to Jerusalem, calling it holy, and naming it city of those fathers who were chosen, he immediately went on to give the reason for the retribution. You inflicted all this on us because of our sins, because we sinned and were wrong to depart from you (vv. 28–29): it was not without reason that you handed over to the enemy the city you consecrated and allowed us to become captives; rather, it was because we sinned and were wrong to depart from you. The phrase from you is highlighted to give the sense, from you the maker and creator, the good Lord, nourisher, protector, freeing from the slavery of the Egyptians, dividing the sea, leading through the depths, flooding the dry rock | with pangs from blows,⁸⁴ providing all the other good things recorded. So we were wrong to depart from you and sinned in everything: we did not break this or that command, but all your commands. We did not heed the commandments of your law, or keep them or discharge them, as you told us so that it would be good for us (v. 30). Here, too, he brought out once more the great degree of his piety and wisdom: The observance of the laws and commandments, he is saying, provided nothing to the lawgiver, but to us were a source of abundance of good things; so this was the reason you imposed those laws, to supply us with an occasion of salvation.

Since we transgressed, therefore, All that you inflicted on us and all you did to us you did by a true judgment (v. 31): the punishment fits the crime. Then, to explain it, he goes on, You gave us into the hands of lawless people, hostile, rebellious, and you handed us over to an unjust king, the most wicked in all the earth (v. 32): since we did not serve you as our king, and instead spurned your goodness, you were right to oblige us to serve a king who is the most cruel, most harsh, and completely oblivious of justice, with subjects who are also in accord with the king’s viciousness. Yet despite being in such awful trouble, we have lost all forthrightness and are prevented by shame from offering a petition to you (the meaning of the following words). And now we cannot open our mouth, we have become a shame and reproach to your servants and those who reverence you (v. 33):⁸⁵ the mass of lawlessness stops our mouth; yet though we have become shameful, ridiculous, and an object of mockery to the enemy, we who are called your servants implore you by the name of your lordship imposed on us to show your strength to the adversaries and not eliminate us completely from your providence.

For your name's sake do not surrender us forever, do not relinquish your covenant, and do not snatch your mercy from us (v. 34): we presume to say this because we have many pledges of your goodness—firstly, the very name of your lordship; then, the immeasurable mercy which you exercise in guiding all things; in addition to this the treaties with our ancestors, promising them to make their race illustrious and glorious. He next mentions as well the ancestors' names, summoning the good Lord to mercy by mention of those righteous ones. | For the sake of Abraham your beloved, for the sake of Isaac your servant and Israel your holy one, to whom you said, I shall multiply your offspring like the stars of the sky and like the sand on the sea shore (vv. 35–36): you promised this, Lord, to those whom you guided and made famous so that the race rivaled the grains of sand for number and became as bright, lofty, and illustrious as the stars. 1329

He next compares their present situation with the promises. Lord, we have become fewer than any other nation, and are lowly in all the earth today (v. 37). And lest he falsely find fault with the promises, he immediately supplied the reason, because of our sins: you did not utter false promises, Lord, it was we who broke the agreements; many though we were in accord with the promise and beyond counting, our numbers have dwindled because of our sins. He implied this, in fact, by saying We have become fewer; he did not say, We are few in comparison with all the nations, but We have become fewer, that is, Whereas we were beyond counting in accord with your promise, we broke your commandments and became few after being many. He then details to God the misfortune gripping them, not as though informing him in his ignorance but to summon him to lovingkindness by recounting the disasters. At this time there is no ruler, prophet, or leader (v. 38): we are deprived of kingship, prophecy, priesthood, your marvelous divine gifts by which we have constantly been guided.⁸⁶ No burnt offering, sacrifice, offering, or incense. And to bring out the reason why it was not possible to offer sacrifice, he logically went on, No place to offer firstfruits in your presence and find mercy. The law, you see, prescribed the ritual of sacrifices in one place, and offering sacrifice in another place was a blatant offense.

The Jews were unwilling to hear this; closing their eyes and blocking their ears, they continued to perform everything in contravention of the law. These holy young people, on the contrary, understood the purpose of the law and said there was no place to offer firstfruits in his presence and find mercy. Since it is impossible to attain this, he is saying, being at a distance from that holy city, we have found some way to worship, Lord. *With a contrite heart and a spirit of lowliness we offer supplication to you and implore that it be accepted. As though with burnt offerings of rams and bulls, and as though with ten thousands | of fat lambs, let our offering come before you today and let it be performed in accord with your wishes,*⁸⁷ because there is no shame for those who trust in you (vv. 39–40): since your law does not permit the prescribed sacrifices to be offered in every place, instead of rams, bulls, and lambs beyond counting we offer a contrite and humbled heart, and beg that it be more pleasing to you than any sacrifice, since you are in the habit of freeing from all shame those who trust in you. Now, this holy man did not speak this way of himself: he was schooled by the prophet David, who in the fifty-first psalm says, “If you had wanted sacrifice, I would have given it; you will not be pleased with burnt offerings. A contrite spirit is a sacrifice to God, a contrite and humbled heart God will not despise.”⁸⁸ And again on God’s part, “Surely I do not eat the flesh of bulls, or drink goats’ blood? Sacrifice to God a sacrifice of praise, pay your vows to the Most High, call upon me in the day of your tribulation, and I shall rescue you and you will glorify me”; and shortly after, “A sacrifice of praise will glorify me, and there is the path in which I shall show him my salvation.”⁸⁹ Schooled in these sentiments, this divine man begged that a contrite heart be accepted in place of any sacrifice.

He then went on, And now we follow you with all our heart, we fear you and seek your face; do not put us to shame (v. 41): the great number of the misfortunes made us different from before, and from being transgressors of your commandments they caused us to fear and seek you with all our heart. By God’s face here he referred to his benevolence, the restoration of freedom and regaining his providence: for those who enjoyed it there was the possibility of seeing both the divine temple and the rituals performed there, in which they imagined they saw God, incorporeal and invisible though he is. Since, then, you brought about such a change in us by means of punishment, Do not put us to shame; instead, deal with us according to your mildness and according to the abundance of your mercy. Deliver us according to your marvelous actions, and give glory to your name (vv. 42–43): for this reason regale us with compassion and lovingkindness; it is natural for you to be merciful and show longsuffering to all, and you have the power to second your wishes, as the marvels constantly performed by you confirm. In fact, what is done for us will also cause your name to be praised, not only by us who are saved but also by those witnessing our salvation. So give glory to your name, Lord. Let all those who bring trouble on your servants be confounded, | let them be frustrated in all their power, and let their strength be crushed. Let them know that you alone are Lord God, glorious throughout the whole world (vv. 43–45): when this lovingkindness is shown us, the audacity of the adversaries will be defeated, their rage snuffed out, their lofty attitude crushed, and they will know that you alone are Lord and God, worthy of being praised by the whole world. Those who now worship many gods will know the weakness of their own gods and will worship your might. 1333

While those inside the furnace, then, continued moving to and fro, the king’s ministers, being also the holy ones’ accusers, did not stop fueling the fire with branches, tow and naphtha, a substance occurring in that country capable of lighting fires. But the fuel fed to the fire was so copious that it spread out forty-nine cubits and incinerated the astrologers close by.⁹⁰ While those outside fed the flames, an angel from God extinguished the flames, kept the middle of the furnace clear of burning coals, and caused the fire to produce a cool and moderately damp breeze that brought considerable relief to the holy ones and to direct it on to the saints' bodies. It made the middle of the furnace, the text says, like a breath of dew whistling through it; the fire did not touch them at all or distress them or trouble them greatly (v. 50). Let no one contemplating this, however, minimize the holy ones' trials; instead, let them recall those sacred words, "The God in heaven whom we serve is capable of rescuing us from the blazing furnace, and he will rescue us from your hands, O King," and "If not, let it be known to you, O King, that we will not serve your gods and worship the golden image that you set up."⁹¹ The result was that those holy young people scorned that awful flame, not seeing this outcome but expecting death; the arbiter of the contest, however, awarded them the prize as he wished, and confounded the guilty while making the others illustrious.

On attaining this preservation, therefore, the blessed and thrice-blessed young people, as often happens, did not allow only one to sing God's praises, instead as with one voice they praised and glorified God and blessed him in the furnace (v. 51), producing their excellent harmony and remarkable hymn-singing in opposition to the harmony and musical instruments used for the statue, | and showing how much more advantageous was not adoring the statue than adoring it. They begin the hymn in this fashion, Blessed are you, Lord, God of our ancestors, to be praised and highly exalted forever; and blessed is the holy name of your glory, to be highly praised and highly exalted forever (v. 52). They are the words of a love that is most ardent and inexhaustible; stricken with it, they search for terms capable of conveying the dignity of the one to be praised, and not finding them they invent them by forming compounds, speaking of God in terms of to be highly praised and highly exalted—and not only him but also a term for his glory. Now, they do well constantly to invoke Lord and God of the ancestors, admitting that they themselves are unworthy of this title.

Blessed are you in the temple of your holy glory, highly to be praised and highly glorious forever (v. 53). They hold an indelible memory of the divine temple, and being scrupulous observers of the law they pray according to the law in the sense, With eyes fixed on that temple where your glory is accustomed to manifest itself, we offer this hymn of praise: even if set on fire countless times, it shares in your holiness. And lest someone form the idea that they confined the incorporeal and uncircumscribed God in a place, they necessarily go on to say, Blessed are you on the throne of your kingdom, highly to be exalted forever (v. 54). Then to show what throne they refer to, they immediately add, Blessed are you who gaze into depths, seated on the cherubim, highly to be praised and highly to be exalted forever (v. 55). And since that temple had images of the cherubim in the holy of holies, lest any harm come to the listeners at this point and they think God is circumscribed, they offer assistance to the listener by saying, Blessed are you in the firmament of heaven, highly to be praised and highly to be exalted forever (v. 56): you are everywhere, they are saying, you fill all things, and you encompass all creation.

Having thus sung praise, they call all created nature to a share in hymn-singing, not only the rational but also the irrational and inanimate. Bless the Lord, all you works of the Lord, sing praise and highly exalt him forever (v. 57). They refrain from giving only a common summons, instead inviting each individually, not only visible things but also invisible nature. | Bless the Lord, you an- 1337
gels of the Lord, sing praise and highly exalt him forever (v. 58). To avoid protracting this treatment to unlimited length by commenting on each verse, they summon to the choir heaven, the waters above the heavens and the powers encircling the divine throne. They also summon sun and moon and the other lights; and not only things in heaven but also those in the sky: cloud and dew and winds; then the diverse qualities, cold and heat; then its nature and effect together, fire and heat, since fire is the term for a nature whereas heat is not a substance but the effect of fire. They summon also dew, snowstorm, ice, cold, frost, snowfall, lightning flashes, clouds, and things of that kind and nature. Then nights and days, and what they produce, light and darkness, some being names, others events: “God called the light day, and the dark

he called night,”⁹² remember; you see, even if darkness is shadow and not substance, it is an event that happens, and produces night. And since they mentioned dew and snowstorm, they necessarily bring out also their source: Bless, lightnings and clouds (v. 73), some giving birth, others foretelling the birth; the inspired author says, remember, “He made lightnings for rain.”⁹³

Having thus made mention of the things in heaven and in the sky, and bidden each to sing praise, they transfer the invitation to praise to mother earth, saying, Let the earth bless the Lord, sing praise and highly exalt him forever (v. 74). Then individually, Bless the Lord, mountains and hills (v. 75). Then what it gives birth to, Bless the Lord, all that grows in the ground (v. 76). Then the watering it needs, Bless the Lord, you springs (v. 78). And since the sea and the rivers are from the lower part, they necessarily made mention of these as well; and they mention also what are nourished in the sea, Bless the Lord, you sea monsters and all that move in the waters (v. 79). After that they summon the birds, the wild beasts, the cattle, and last of all the human race, keeping the order of the creation of the world. Blessed Moses, remember, recorded first the emergence by the divine word of the trees, the production of the species that swim, and in addition to those and with those the classes of flying birds, and after them wild beasts and cattle, and finally the human being.

Now, in summoning human nature to hymn-singing, once again | they urge them individually to sing the praises of the creator: first of all they bid the children of Israel do it, dividing them 1340 in many ways, putting the priests first as being entrusted with divine worship. Then, in case they be thought to confine the hymn-singing to the priests alone, they continue, Bless the Lord, you servants of the Lord, praise and highly exalt him forever (v. 85), as if to say that it is possible to serve the Lord devotedly even for the person who does not boast of priesthood. They also proclaim ahead of time the resurrection: Bless the Lord, spirits and souls of the righteous (v. 86), that is, the spiritual souls of the righteous, those who proved superior to human passions and have received the grace of the Spirit. Next also those possessing some forms of virtue: Bless the Lord, all you who are holy and humble in heart (v.

87): it is possible for those freed from iniquity and exercising a humble attitude to please God and offer a suitable hymn of praise.

Now, far from wasting their time in listing all these, they are firstly enkindled with love for the Lord and remind themselves of his ineffable kindnesses and of creation, which occurred at the beginning for the sake of human beings. By these words, in fact, they declare, We praise and highly exalt you for bringing us kindnesses through angels, for creating heaven for our sake, illuminating the day with the sun and blending the darkness of the night with the moon, and teaching us the periods of time. We praise you for causing the sky to produce stars for us like a meadow, feeding our eyes on unfading blooms, and through their course providing us with knowledge of the stages of the night. Who could adequately sing your praises on seeing the changes of the seasons, the alterations of the solstices, heat offered at the right time in summer, then cooling breaths of wind, cold and rain brought in winter, each proceeding in rhythm and order, lightning announcing the rain, clouds producing the rain, mountains and plains covered in crops and groves, springs bubbling up and providing water for the plants, rivers flowing without ceasing and not coming to an end of their course, the sea positioned between land masses, responsible for friendship and harmony, a shared place for commerce between two parties?

Not to cite every detail, the blessed men first mentioned all these things as a demonstration of their gratitude and in their wish to compose a more ardent hymn by listing the benefits. Secondly, it was also an attempt to instruct the astrologers | listening outside that the elements adored by them were created by the God of all—hence their explicit mention of fire and water, sun and moon, heaven and earth in their wish to convince the uncomprehending people to cease worshiping visible things, acknowledge their Lord and offer fitting adoration to him. You see, it was likely that on witnessing the great miracle and observing the vanquishing of the fire, the shaming of them and the king, and the preservation and forthrightness of those young captives, they would accept the instruction in godliness given in the hymn-singing.

After such a song of praise, they went on in conclusion, Bless the Lord, Hananiah, Azariah, and Mishaël, praise and highly exalt him forever (v. 88). They thus considered themselves the least of creation and the most insignificant of all people. Blessed Paul was also like that in saying, “To me, the least of all the saints, this grace was given,” and elsewhere, “Christ came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am the foremost.”⁹⁴ He names himself as the first of sinners, and he calls himself the least of the saints; likewise these blessed people invite themselves last to sing the Lord’s praises and highly exalt him forever. Then they describe the marvel, Because he rescued us from Hades and saved us from the hand of death: we had despaired of any human intervention. He rescued us from the midst of the blazing flame, and from the midst of the fire he rescued us. So confess to the Lord that he is good, that his mercy is forever (vv. 88–89). After all, what could be better, what kinder than the one exercising such mercy in our predicament? In an expression of such wonderful virtue they admit that it was through mercy that they attained salvation. Next, since they had mentioned above only the children of Israel, they invite also godly people among the nations zealous in serving God. Bless the God of gods, all you who reverence the Lord, praise and confess that his mercy is forever and ever and ever (v. 90). In their efforts to bring out his unlimited goodness, which proved fruitless, they many times repeat the word forever.

This hymn of these holy people, being of this nature, astonished the cruel and harsh king: he rose from the royal throne, ran to them, and observed four instead of three moving to and fro in the furnace. | He said to his noblemen, Did we not throw three men bound into the fire? Lo, I discern four men unbound walking about in the midst of the fire, no harm having come to them, and the fourth has the appearance of a son of God (vv. 91–92). What indescribable longsuffering! The three young people were right to cry aloud, His mercy is forever and ever and ever. Even this man, guilty of such awful cruelty and conceit, attempting to arrogate to himself divine reverence and punish cruelly and savagely the divine servants, it brings to godliness, gives him a glimpse of characteristic wonder-working, and allows him a vision of an angel sent to the assistance of the holy ones. It also astonishes him, first by the number, giving a glimpse of four instead of three, then by the loosing of bonds (he saw them to be unbound instead of bound), then by the preservation (no harm having come to them, he says).

Τοῦτο καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ θειοτάτου πεποίηκε Δανιήλ· ἀναστὰς γὰρ προσεκύνησεν αὐτῷ, καὶ μανὰ καὶ εὐωδίαν προσενεχθῆναι αὐτῷ παρενεγγύησε. Καὶ νῦν δὲ ὡσαύτως θεασάμενος τῶν ἁγίων τούτων τὴν σωτηρίαν, ὑμνεῖ τὸν Θεόν, καὶ θαυμάζει τοὺς ἄνδρας, ὅτι ἠλλοίωσαν τὸ ῥῆμα τοῦ βασιλέως, καὶ προετίμησαν, φησίν, εὐσεβῆ θάνατον παρὰ νόμου ζωῆς. |

Thus astonished and relieved of his conceit, he came near. He said, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, servants of God the Most High, come out and approach me. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego came out of the midst of the fire (v. 93), The vain person who had said, Who is the God who will rescue you from my hands? had learned that he is the God who has unspeakable power, bidding the fire demonstrate to the holy ones an opposite quality; he knew that the one he did not believe to be God is God and Most High God.⁹⁵ Now, when the holy ones emerged, everyone—satraps, local officials and generals—were amazed to see the bodies of the holy ones preserved intact, not even their hair experiencing any harm from that awful flame. Not only their hair, but even their clothing and footwear remained untouched so as to be free of any smell of fire. Then, on perceiving this, Nebuchadnezzar sings praise in the words, Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who sent his angel and rescued his young people because they trusted in him, resisted the king's command, and surrendered their bodies to prevent their worshiping and bowing down to any other god than their God (v. 95).

Despite his constant experience of God's power, that vain man consigned the miracles to oblivion. He had done the same thing in the case of the most divine Daniel as well, having risen, worshiped him, and ordered a grain offering and incense to be offered him. In this case, too, on perceiving the preservation of these holy ones, he sang God's praises and marveled at the men for resisting his command and preferring a pious death to a lawless life. | And now, behold, I issue decrees: if any people, tribe, or language blasphemes against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, they will meet with destruction and their houses will be despoiled, because there is no other god who will succeed in rescuing them (v. 96). He had learned this from actual experience: having destroyed the shrines of many so-called gods, plundered the precincts, overturned altars, and slain those consecrated to them, he had no experience of divine beneficence; but after venting his spleen against those dedicated to God, he saw both the unlimited power of God and his ineffable longsuffering. After all, he kept his own servants safe, and for the time being did not call him to account for his insane rage—though shortly after he punished him moderately when he persisted in his impiety, and then accorded him lovingkindness when he turned to repentance.

⁹⁵ Has the king been converted? Theodoret suggests as much, whereas modern commentators point out that the term Most High God (Hebrew El Elyon) is used by non-Israelites such as Melchizedek (Gen 14:19–20), Balaam (Num 24:16), and the king of Babylon (Isa 14:14).

The king nevertheless at that time appointed Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego to positions in the land of Babylon, heaped honors on them, and granted them control of all the Jews in his kingdom (v. 97). The Lord exercises such providence in favor of those zealous in serving him. These holy young people were right to cry aloud, No shame comes to those who trust in you. May we, therefore, practice this hope, putting the creator and governor ahead of all his creation. And may these blessed young people prove an example of benefit, a paradigm of godliness, guides to lead us to God and to what is provided by God to the deserving. May this be the good fortune of us all, thanks to the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit be glory, now and forever, for ages of ages. Amen.

CHAPTER 4

King Nebuchadnezzar to all the peoples, tribes, languages, inhabitants of all the earth: may peace be granted you in abundance (v. 1). I think it worthwhile, firstly, to outline the theme of this letter and its contents, | and then interpret it in the following way.⁹⁶ Nebuchadnezzar was in control of the whole of Asia, had brought Egypt under his control, and had subjugated the Ethiopians living near Egypt. Nevertheless he treated his subjects very harshly and had reached such a state of arrogance as to think that he was greater and more powerful than not only the so-called gods but even the true God himself. This insatiable conceit of his not only the divinely inspired Daniel brings out but also the most divine prophet Isaiah—or, rather, the God of all himself speaking through the prophet in these terms, “Woe to you Assyrians, the rod of my anger and my rage is in their hands. I dispatch my rage against ⁹⁶ The chapter has structural oddities, beginning as a letter in the first person from the king, changing to third person in v. 19. The story, involving another dream interpreted by Daniel, also has a moral purpose, curbing Nebuchadnezzar’s (Antiochus’s) overweening pride.

“Ο δὲ λέγει, τοιοῦτόν ἐστι· Θρήνων μὲν εἰσιν ἄξιοι Ἀσσύριοι, μυρίων ὄντες ἐργάται κακῶν· ἀλλ’ ὅμως τούτοις διακόνους εἰς τὰς κατὰ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν χρήσομαι τιμωρίας, καὶ οἷόν τινα ῥάβδον κολαστικὴν τούτους τοῖς παρανομοῦσιν ἐπάξω· οὐ τοῖς ἄλλοις δὲ μόνον ἀνθρώποις, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ προσαγορευομένῳ μου λαῷ. Ἐπάξω δέ, διὰ τὴν πολλὴν αὐτοῦ ἀσέβειαν, καὶ παρανομίαν, καὶ τὰς τε πόλεις αὐτῶν διὰ τούτων καθελῶ, καὶ τὰ ἐν ταῖς πόλεσι σκῦλα τούτων γενέσθαι παρασκευάσω. Ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν, οἷόν τινα δημῷ τῷ Ἀσσυρίῳ χρώμενος, δίκας δι’ αὐτοῦ τοὺς παρανομοῦντας εἰσπράττομαι. «Αὐτὸς δέ, φησὶν, οὐχ οὕτως ἐνεθυμήθη, καὶ τῇ ψυχῇ οὐχ οὕτως λελογίσται· ἀλλὰ ἀπαλλάξει ὁ νοῦς αὐτοῦ, καὶ τοῦ ἐξολοθρεῦσαι ἔθνη οὐκ ὀλίγα. Καὶ ἐὰν εἴπωσιν αὐτῷ· Σὺ μόνος εἶ ἄρχων, καὶ ἐρεῖ· Οὐκ ἔλαβον τὴν χώραν τὴν ἐπάνω Βαβυλῶνος, καὶ Χαλάνην, οὗ πύργος ὠκοδομήθη, καὶ ἔλαβον Ἀραβίαν, καὶ Δαμασκόν, καὶ Σαμάρειαν; Ὅν τρόπον ταύτας, καὶ πάσας τὰς χώρας λήψομαι.» Διὰ τούτων μὲν οὖν τὴν ἀλαζονείαν αὐτοῦ δῆλην πεποίηκε. Εἴτα προαγορεύει τὰ καταληψόμενα τὴν Ἱερουσαλήμ κακὰ, ὑποδείκνυσι δὲ καὶ τὰς τῆς τιμωρίας αἰτίας· «Ὁλολύξατε γὰρ, φησί, τὰ γλυπτὰ ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ, καὶ ἐν Σαμαρείᾳ· ὃν τρόπον γὰρ ἐποίησα ἐν Σαμαρείᾳ καὶ τοῖς χειροποιήτοις αὐτῆς, οὕτω ποιήσω καὶ ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ, καὶ τοῖς εἰδώλοις αὐτῆς.» Μεμαθήκαμεν δέ, ὅτι τῆς Ἱερουσαλήμ Σενναχηρεῖμ ὁ τῶν Ἀσσυρίων οὐ περιεγένετο βασιλεύς, ὁ δὲ Ναβουχοδονόσορ εἰς Βαβυλῶνα τὰ βασίλεια μεταθείς, καὶ βασιλικὴν ἐκείνην ἀποφήνας πόλιν μετὰ τὴν τῆς Νινευῆ κατάλυσιν, ἐπεστράτευσε τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ, καὶ ἀνάστατον τὴν Ἱερουσαλήμ πεποικηκώς, τοὺς μὲν πλείστους τῶν οἰκητόρων ἀνεῖλε, τοὺς δὲ λοιποὺς ἐξανδραποδίσας αἰχμαλώτους ἀπήγαγεν· ὥς εἶναι δῆλον κἀντεῦθεν, ὥς μίαν οἶδεν ἡ θεία Γραφή τὴν Ἀσσυρίων | καὶ Βαβυλωνίων βασιλείαν· καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἐπαγομένων δὲ τοῦτο ῥᾶδιόν ἐστι καταμαθεῖν. «Ἔσται γὰρ, φησὶν, ὅταν συντελέσῃ Κύριος ποιῶν πάντα ἐν τῷ ὅρει Σιών καὶ ἐν

a lawless nation, and among my people I will arrange for them to rape and pillage, trample down cities, and reduce them to dust.” Now, what he is saying is something like this:⁹⁷ Assyrians deserve lamentation, being productive of countless evils; yet I shall use them as ministers to punish sinners, and shall inflict them like a kind of punitive rod on the transgressors—and not only on the other people but also on those called my people. Now, I shall inflict them for its great impiety and lawlessness, destroy their cities through them, and cause the contents of the cities to be plundered. So by using the Assyrian like an executioner, I shall through him call the transgressors to account. “In his case, however,” the text goes on, “the intention was not like this, the thoughts of his heart not like this. Instead, his mind feels free to destroy and wipe out not a few nations. If they say to him, You alone are in charge, he will reply, Did I not take the country above Babylon and Calno, where the tower was built? Did I not take Arabia, Damascus, and Samaria? In the way I took them I shall also take all the countries.” In this, then, he made clear his arrogance. He then forecasts the troubles about to befall Jerusalem, and gives a glimpse also of the reasons for the retribution: “Bewail the statues in Jerusalem and in Samaria: in the way I treated Samaria and its artifacts, so shall I treat Jerusalem and its idols.”

Now, we learned that Sennacherib king of the Assyrians did not prevail over Jerusalem.⁹⁸ Nebuchadnezzar transferred the capital to Babylon, made that the royal city after the destruction of Nineveh, invaded Judah, razed Jerusalem, slew most of the inhabitants, took the rest captive and led them off to slavery. So it is clear from this that the divine Scripture treats the Assyrian | and the Babylonian as the one kingdom, as is easy to discover from the following. “When the Lord has finished doing everything on

⁹⁷ To reinforce the story’s point, Theodoret quotes the Lord speaking through Isaiah (10:5–16) about the use of (not Babylonians, but) Assyrians to discipline his own people, the first verse being problematic for all commentators, and so calling for a rough summary.

Ἱερουσαλήμ, ἐπάξει Κύριος ἐπὶ τὸν νοῦν τὸν μέγαν τὸν ἄρχοντα τῶν Ἀσσυρίων, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ ὕψος τῆς δόξης τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτοῦ.» Ἐπιμωρήσατο δὲ τὴν Ἱερουσαλήμ ὁ Θεός, οὐ διὰ τοῦ Σενναχηρείμ, ὅς τῶν Ἀσσυρίων ἐβασίλευσεν, ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦ Ναβουχοδονόσορ. Ὁ μὲν γὰρ, οὐ μόνον οὐκ ἐπόρθησε τὴν πόλιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄπασαν ἀπολωλεκῶς τὴν στρατείαν, ἀπέδρα μόνος, καὶ οἴκοι τὴν σφαγὴν παρὰ τῶν υἱῶν ἐδέξατο· ὁ δὲ Ναβουχοδονόσορ καὶ τὴν πόλιν καθεῖλε, καὶ ἐνέπρησε τὸν θεῖον νεών, καὶ τὸν λαὸν ἀπήγαγε δορυάλωτον. Διδάσκει τοίνυν ἡμᾶς ἡ θεία Γραφή, ὅτι μετὰ τὸ συντελέσαι Κύριον ποιοῦντα πάντα ἐν τῷ ὄρει Σιών καὶ ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ, ἃ ἠπέλιψε λέγων· «Ὁλολύξατε, τὰ γλυπτὰ ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ· ὃν τρόπον γὰρ ἐποίησα Σαμαρείαν καὶ τοῖς εἰδώλοις αὐτῆς, οὕτω ποιήσω καὶ τῇ Ἱερουσαλήμ καὶ τοῖς χειροποιήτοις αὐτῆς,» ἐπάξει, φησί, Κύριος ἐπὶ τὸν νοῦν τὸν μέγαν, τὸν ἄρχοντα τῶν Ἀσσυρίων. Καὶ οὐ λέγει τῶν Βαβυλωνίων, ἀλλὰ τῶν Ἀσσυρίων· μία γὰρ τούτων κακείνων ἡ βασιλεία. Νοῦν δὲ μέγαν καλεῖ διὰ τὸ ὑψηλὸν καὶ ἀλαζονικὸν τῶν βουλευμάτων· διὸ καὶ εἰκότως ἐπάγει· «Καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ ὕψος τῆς δόξης τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτοῦ.» Καὶ οὐχ ἀπλῶς ἔφη, «τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ,» ἀλλὰ «τῆς δόξης τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτοῦ.» τουτέστιν, ὅς ἀνθρωπος ὢν ὑψηλότατός τε καὶ μέγιστος εἶναι φαντάζεται. Εἶπε γάρ· «Ἐν τῇ ἰσχυί μου ποιήσω, καὶ ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ τῆς συνέσεώς μου ἀφελῶ ὅρια ἐθνῶν, καὶ τὴν ἰσχὺν αὐτῶν προνομεύσω, καὶ σείσω πόλεις κατοικουμένας, καὶ τὴν οἰκουμένην ὅλην καταλήψομαι τῇ χειρί μου ὡς νοσσιάν, καὶ ὡς καταλελειμμένα ὡὰ ἀρῶ, καὶ οὐκ ἔσται ὅς διαφεύξηταί με, ἢ ἀντείπη μοι.» Οὕτω γυμνῶσας τῶν λογισμῶν τοῦ Ἀσσυρίου τὸν τυφόν, ἐλέγχει τῶν ἐνθυμημάτων τὸ μάταιον, καὶ διδάσκει, ὡς οὐδὲν ἂν τῶν ὑπ' αὐτοῦ γενομένων ἐγένετο, μὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ συγχωρήσαντος, καὶ βουλευθέντος δίκας τῆς ἀσεβείας εἰσπράξασθαι τοὺς ταῦτα ὑπ' αὐτοῦ πεπονθότας. Οὗ χάριν εἰκότως ἐπάγει· «Μὴ δοξασθήσεται ἀξίνη ἄνευ τοῦ κόπτοντος ἐν αὐτῇ; ἢ ὑψωθήσεται πρίων ἄνευ τοῦ ἔλκοντος αὐτόν; Ὡσαύτως ἐάν τις ἄρη ῥάβδον ἢ ξύλον.» Καθάπερ, φησὶν, ἀδύνατον, αὐτομάτως ἀξίνην, ἢ πρίωνα, ἢ ῥάβδον κινήθηναι· τηνικαῦτα γὰρ τούτων ἕκαστον ἐνεργεῖ, ἥνίκα ἂν τις τῇ χειρὶ χρησάμενος κινήσῃ ταῦτα θελήσειεν· οὕτω καὶ σύ, τῆς ἐμῆς παραχωρησάσης σοι προμηθείας, πεποίηκας ἃ πεποίηκας, διὰ τὴν τῶν πεπονθότων παρανομίαν. Μὴ τοίνυν νόμιζε, τῇ οἰκείᾳ σοφίᾳ καὶ δυνάμει ταῦτα κατωρθωκέναι. Εἰ δὲ οὐ βούλει ταῦτα σωφρόνως μαθεῖν, καὶ

Mount Sion and in Jerusalem, he will call to account the ruler of the Assyrians for his conceited attitude and for the loftiness of the glory of his eyes.” Now, God punished Jerusalem, not through Sennacherib, who ruled the Assyrians, but through Nebuchadnezzar: whereas the former not only failed to sack the city but lost his whole army, took to his heels by himself, and met his death at home at the hands of his sons,⁹⁹ Nebuchadnezzar destroyed the city, burned down the divine temple, and took the people captive. The divine Scripture teaches us, therefore, that after the Lord has brought to completion all he threatened to do on Mount Sion and in Jerusalem in saying, “Bewail the statues in Jerusalem: in the way I treated Samaria and its artifacts, so shall I treat Jerusalem and its idols,” he (the Lord, I mean) will call to account the ruler of the Assyrians for his conceited attitude. He does not say Babylonians, but “Assyrians”: the kingdom of the one and the other is the same. Now, by “conceited attitude” he means the loftiness and arrogance of his plans; hence he rightly added, “and for the loftiness of the glory of his eyes,” and not simply “glory” but “the glory of his eyes”—that is, despite being human, he imagined himself very lofty and important. He said, in fact, “I shall accomplish it with my strength, and with the wisdom of my understanding I shall cancel boundaries of nations and plunder their might, I shall shake populated cities and with my own hand take possession of the whole world like a bird’s nest and do away with it like abandoned eggs, and there is no one who will escape or gainsay me.”

Having thus laid bare the conceit of the Assyrian’s thoughts, he censures the futility of his desires, and conveys the fact that nothing of what was done by him would happen without God’s permitting it and wanting to call to account for impiety those who had suffered this from him. Hence he was right to add, “Surely an axe will not be glorified apart from the one wielding it? Or the saw exalted apart from the one pulling it? Likewise for anyone holding rod or staff.” As it is impossible, he is saying, for axe or saw or rod to move of itself (each of these operating when someone chooses to move them by using their hand), so too you did what you did, when my providence allowed you, on account of the lawlessness of the victims. So do not think you achieved this by your own wisdom and power. If, however, you are not prepared to learn this lesson in a sensible fashion and put an end to your lofty arrogance, you will learn by experience that | this is the way things are: “The Lord Sabaoth will send dishonor upon your honor, and a burning fire will be kindled upon your glory.” And in another place God says such things to the prophet,¹⁰⁰ “You will take up this lament against the king of Babylon, and you will say on that day, How has the importunate one fallen? How has the oppressor fallen? God smashed the yoke of the sinners, the yoke of the rulers, striking a nation with anger, with an incurable blow.” Then he brings out the joy of the world: “All the earth with gladness, and the trees of Lebanon will rejoice over you, and the cedar of Lebanon; since you have fallen asleep, no one has come up to chop us down.” Now, he says this figuratively, using the term “cedars of Lebanon” either for Israel’s fame and glory or for those of high rank entrusted with reigning. And shortly after, to mock his conceit and bring out the collapse of his arrogance, he says, “How it is fallen from heaven, the daystar that rises at dawn! Brought crashing to the ground was the one who sent dispatches to all the nations. You said to yourself, I shall ascend to heaven, I shall set my throne above the stars of heaven, I shall sit on a high mountain facing the high mountains to the north, I shall rise above the clouds, I shall be like the Most High.” Then to emphasize the impermanence of human prosperity, “Now, on the contrary, after presuming to entertain these thoughts, you will descend into Hades and the foundations of the earth. Those seeing you will be amazed at you and will say of you, This is the one who provokes the earth, who shakes kings, renders the whole world desolate, and destroys its cities, yet had no mercy on those in his train. All the kings of the earth went to their rest in honor, each in his own house, whereas you by contrast will be cast out on the mountains like a loathsome corpse along with many dead people pierced with a sword, going down into Hades.”

teners and later readers¹⁰¹ to them if they want to learn of his conceit and cruelty, return to the matter in hand. The God of all, then, in his wish to guide this man to godliness, frequently provided many salutary remedies: first, in the second year of his reign he let him see in a dream that image; then, by his forgetting the dream he brought him to need the prophet; next, through the interpretation he conveyed precisely the succession of kings, giving him a glimpse of the brevity and impermanence of human prosperity. | At the outset he profited from the experience and offered excessive reverence to Daniel, ordering that incense and libations be offered to him as to a god. In turn, however, before much time had passed, he set up that statue and obliged all his subjects to worship it, and consigned to the fire that was fed unceasingly those who set greater store by godliness. In turn, however, the good Lord, who by exercising longsuffering did not call him to account for his arrogance and ferocity, gave him a glimpse of divine power by freeing his devoted servants from those awful flames. But in turn he gained little benefit from it: while he sang the praises of the God of all and threatened with the ultimate penalty those who uttered blasphemy against him, right from the outset in that very same year he consigned this wonderful miracle to oblivion. He advanced on Jerusalem, destroyed the city walls, set fire to the holy temple of God, presumed to enter its precincts, seized all the offerings, and carried them off to Babylon along with the captives. Now, the fact that he attacked at that time blessed Jeremiah also informs us in these words, “The word that came from the Lord to Jeremiah in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, when the might of the king of Babylon besieged Jerusalem.”¹⁰² Blessed Daniel in recording a description of the statue cited this date, “In his eighteenth year King Nebuchadnezzar made a statue of gold.”¹⁰³ So it is clear that at the beginning of the year he required the worship of the statue, then sent the army and personally followed it, and conquered Jerusalem in the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah and the nineteenth year of his own reign.

Since the wretch gained no benefit from any event, therefore, the God of all was angered and put fear into him, firstly through a dream, and then by means of Daniel he made clear what was indicated by the dream. Instead of immediately bringing retribution on him for this, he offers him advice and counsel through Daniel, showing longsuffering for a whole year in expectation of repentance. But since he chose not to gain any cure from the long-suffering, he inflicted the troubles he had threatened; instead of punishing him straight out, he struck with insanity and dementia that arrogant mind that had dreamed of preternatural things.¹⁰⁴ Then when he became wildly enraged, he caused him to be driven out | and live in the desert for a long time. He next caused him to 1356 gain an appreciation of the fate that had befallen him; after all, it was impossible for one who lacked all sense and feeling to reap any benefit. Thus, after refusing to do so, that fellow acknowledged the rapid changes in his life, wept and wailed for his own stupidity, and confessed God’s kingdom to be without succession, lasting for all ages. Learning this from experience, he once more through God’s ineffable lovingkindness returned to his own kingdom. In the belief, however, that it would be an injustice to all people if he were to conceal God’s providence, he recounted in a letter to all his subjects throughout the world his former prosperity and the misfortune that befell him, then the repentance by which he won the Lord over.

While this is the theme of the letter, then, I developed it at length in my wish to bring out this man’s conceit through the scriptural texts, and in my desire to make clear the care of the God of all for everyone. So come now, let us begin the commentary in detail. King Nebuchadnezzar to all the peoples, tribes, languages, in- habitants of all the earth: may peace be granted you in abundance (v. 1). There is need to relate to these words that inspired statement, “It is good for me that you humbled me, so that I might learn your ordinances.”¹⁰⁵ Brought to his senses by experience, he too became a teacher of piety, citing his own sufferings as a remedy for all people, not only his subjects but also those living outside the kingdom. It was proper and appropriate for him to add the greeting, May peace be granted you in abundance, that is, may you not experience the troubles I experienced, and may you continue to enjoy peace.

¹⁰⁴ Theodoret is unable to document these unexpected developments in Nebuchadnezzar’s life for the simple reason that there is no historical evidence for them. The hypothesis that they are associated rather with the later Nabonidus is confirmed by the discovery at Qumran of a fragment of a Prayer of Nabonidus recounting such events, thus encouraging the idea that there was a cycle of Daniel stories in circulation among Jews at that late time.

He then goes on, The signs and wonders that God the Most High worked in my case I am pleased to report to you (v. 2): being an eyewitness of the divine marvels, I thought it right to make you all sharers in the vision I had of them; after all, far from being chance events, they were wonderful and mighty. How wonderful and mighty! His kingdom is an eternal kingdom, and his authority from generation to generation (v. 3): while human affairs, such as they are, have an end, indeed a rapid end, God’s kingdom alone is lasting and unending.

Having thus conveyed in advance the content of the events, he begins the account accordingly. I, Nebuchadnezzar, was enjoying good fortune in my home, prospering on my throne and popular with my people (v. 4). It was not without purpose that he cited his own name: it was to confirm his name in word; since he was very famous as having control of everyone throughout Asia, Egypt, and Ethiopia, he cited his name at the beginning as sufficient confirmation | of what was said. He meant, I was at the height of good 1357 fortune and surrounded continually with countless good things. While enjoying them, I had a dream, and it scared me, I was astonished at it all, my sleep was disturbed and the visions in my head alarmed me (v. 5): while enjoying such great prosperity, I had a distressing dream, and I was very frightened by the contents of the dream, and was further disturbed by being unable to grasp what was signified by it. Hence I summoned those capable of interpreting it. In came magicians, soothsayers, enchanters, and astrologers, and I told the dream in their presence, but they did not inform me of its interpretation until another one came into my presence, Daniel, with the name Belteshazzar according to the name of my God, having a holy spirit of God in him (vv. 7–8). He did not give these details casually: it was in parallel so as to make clear to everyone the prophet’s wisdom by comparison—hence his listing the nationalities of the wise men of Babylon so as to highlight the fact that whereas they understood absolutely nothing, he was illuminated by the divine Spirit.¹⁰⁶ He not only refers to him by the name he had given him, but adds the Hebrew name: Daniel, with the name Belteshazzar according to the name of my God. In other words, he is saying, I admired him from the beginning so much as to give him the name of the god once worshiped by me.¹⁰⁷ And he brings out the reason: having a holy spirit of God in him. We learned this from information from the prophet: how else could he have known the name of the Most Holy Spirit when in thrall to fraudulent idols?

I narrated the dream in his presence: I narrated it, beginning in this fashion. Belteshazzar leader of the magicians, I know the holy spirit is in you, and no mystery is impossible for you. Listen to the vision in the dream I had, and tell me its interpretation, and the visions in my head on my bed (vv. 9–10). Good fortune often causes the general run of people to forget their benefactors, whereas it is necessity that recalls to mind those who have treated us well; and while the person in good health does not keep in mind the physician’s competence, on falling ill they remember they had that complaint before and returned to good health thanks to such and such a physician. So too Nebuchadnezzar: when he consigned those holy people to the fire, he did not remember Daniel’s favor; but when he later had a dream | and felt alarm in his soul, 1360 he remembered Daniel’s wisdom and his recall and interpretation of the previous dream. Hence he said he had God’s Spirit and was capable of interpreting every mystery, and he requested him to make clear to him this dream as well, obscure as it was.

«Ἐθεώρουν δένδρον ἐν μέσῳ τῆς γῆς. (η΄.) Καὶ τὸ ὕψος αὐτοῦ ἔφθασεν ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ τὸ κῦτος αὐτοῦ εἰς τὰ πέρατα τῆς γῆς.» Διὰ δὲ τοῦ δένδρου αὐτὸν ἔφη σημαίνεισθαι ὁ μακάριος Δανιήλ, τὸ δὲ ὕψος λέγει φθάσαι ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, οὐ τὴν φύσιν τοῦ δένδρου σημαίνων, ἀλλὰ τοὺς λογισμοὺς καὶ τὰς φαντασίας. Διὸ καὶ ὁ Ἡσαΐας ἔλεγεν· «Ἐπάξει ὁ Θεὸς ἐπὶ τὸν νοῦν τὸν μέγαν, τὸν βασιλέα τῶν Ἀσσυρίων, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ ὕψος τῆς δόξης τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτοῦ.» Νοῦν δὲ μέγαν αὐτὸν προσηγόρευσεν, ὡς μεγάλα φαντασθέντα, καὶ ὀνειροπολήσαντα, ἃ μετὰ βραχέα διηγήσατο· «Σὺ γὰρ εἶπας· Ἐπάνω τῶν ἀστέρων θήσω τὸν θρόνον μου, καὶ ἔσομαι ὅμοιος τῷ Ὑψίστῳ.» Διὰ τοῦτο ὁρᾷ τὸ ὕψος τοῦ δένδρου ἐφθακὸς ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ· ἐπειδὴ δὲ καί, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, πάσης τῆς οἰκουμένης ἐκράτησεν, ὁρᾷ τοῦ δένδρου τὸ κῦτος, τουτέστι, τὸν ὄγκον τοῦ εὗρους, ἐκταθὲν μέχρις αὐτῶν τῶν περάτων τῆς γῆς.

θ΄. «Τὰ φύλλα αὐτοῦ, φησὶν, ὠραῖα, καὶ ὁ καρπὸς αὐτοῦ πολὺς.» Καλεῖ δὲ φύλλα μὲν τὴν ὀρωμένην εὐπρέπειαν, τὴν ἐν ἐσθῇτι, καὶ θρόνῳ, καὶ βασιλείαις, ἀσπιδιφόροις τε καὶ δορυφόροις, καὶ πεζαιτέροις· καρπὸν δὲ τὸν πανταχόθεν προσφερόμενον φόρον. Διὸ πολὺν τὸν καρπὸν, ἀλλ’ οὐ καλόν, ἔφη· οὐ γὰρ εἶχε τὸ δίκαιον. «Καὶ τροφή πάντων ἐν αὐτῷ.» Οἷ τε γὰρ γεωργοῦντες, διὰ τῆς αὐτοῦ κηδεμονίας εἰρήνης ἀπολαύοντες, τοὺς ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς καρποὺς ἐκομίζοντο· οἷ τε στρατευόμενοι, παρ’ αὐτοῦ τὰ σιτηρέσια κοιμιζόμενοι, τὴν ἐν ὅπλοις ἐποιοῦντο ζωήν. «Ὑποκάτω αὐτοῦ, φησὶν, κατεσκήνουν τὰ θηρία τὰ ἄγρια, καὶ ἐν τοῖς κλάδοις αὐτοῦ κατῴκει τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ ἐξ αὐτοῦ ἐτρέφετο πᾶσα σὰρξ.» Οἷ τε γὰρ θηριώδη βίον ζῶντες βάρβαροι, οἷ τε λογικώτεροι καὶ ἡμερώτεροι, καὶ ὀξεῖς καὶ πτηνοὶ τὴν διάνοιαν, ὑπὸ τὴν τούτου ἐξουσίαν βιοτεύοντες διετέλουν.

ι΄. «Ἐθεώρουν τοῖνον, φησὶν, ἐν ὁράματι τῆς νυκτὸς ἐπὶ τῆς κοίτης μου, καὶ ἰδοὺ εἶρ καὶ ἄγιος ἀπ’ οὐρανοῦ κατέβη.» Εἶρ καλεῖ τὸν ἐγρηγορότα· τοῦτο γὰρ ἐρμηνεύεται τῇ Ἑλλάδι φωνῇ. Ἐγρηγορότα δὲ καλεῖ τὸν ἄγγελον, ἵνα τούτου σημῆνῃ τὸ ἀσώματον· ὁ γὰρ σῶμα περιεκείμενος ὕπνῳ δουλεύει· ὁ δὲ ὕπνου κρείττων σῶματος ἐλεύθερος. He then describes the dream as follows. I had a vision of a tree in the middle of the earth, its top reaching to heaven and its trunk to the ends of the earth (v. 10–11). By the tree blessed Daniel said he personally was depicted, and he said its height reached to heaven to suggest not the real tree but his thoughts and imaginings. Hence Isaiah also said, “God will call to account the ruler of the Assyrians for his conceited attitude and for the loftiness of the glory of his eyes,”¹⁰⁸ referring to his “conceited attitude” for his having lofty imaginings and dreams, which he described shortly afterwards, “You said, in fact, I shall set my throne above the stars, and shall be like the Most High.”¹⁰⁹ This is the reason he sees the height of the tree reaching to heaven; but since, so to say, he even had control of the whole world, he sees the tree trunk—that is, the extent of its breadth—expanding as far as the ends of the earth. Its foliage was charming, and its fruit abundant (v. 12). By foliage he refers to the visible splendor in apparel, throne, palace, warriors bearing shields and javelins, and foot-soldiers, and by fruit to the tribute offered from all quarters—hence his saying its fruit abundant but not beautiful, there being no justice in it. And there was food for all in it: in one sense, the farmers took advantage of peace for tending it and reaped fruit from the earth, and in another, the soldiers gathered provisions from it and spent their life under arms. The wild animals sheltered under it, the birds of heaven dwelt in its branches, and all flesh fed from it: barbarians lived a wild life, whereas more reasonable and civilized people, rapid and uplifted in their thinking, continued to pass their life under his authority.

So I continued looking in the vision of the night on my bed and, lo, a holy eir descended from heaven (v. 13). By eir he refers to the watcher, the meaning in Greek. By watcher he means an angel,¹¹⁰ thus bringing out its bodiless form: what is clad in a body is subject to sleeping, whereas what is rid of a body is superior to the need for sleeping. So he means, I saw an angel, bodiless in nature, who descended from heaven. | He cried aloud and spoke thus, Chop down the tree, and pluck off its branches, strip its foliage, and scatter its fruit (v. 14). He looks to the angel descended from heaven to learn that the God of heaven personally delivered the verdict against him. He is also informed who it was who had given him the kingdom and is now laying it aside: note the tree cut down and the branches separated from it, meaning the prefects, generals, satraps, and those entrusted with other forms of authority by him; the stripped foliage, meaning the glory in which he had been invested falling and fading like leaves; and the fruit scattered, meaning that at the fall of the king in that misfortune those demanding tribute then had no qualms about directing the gain to themselves. Let the wild beasts move from under it, and the birds from its branches: those forced into slavery against their will took occasion from the change in the king's fortunes to cease obeying him. 1361

But leave the stump of its roots in the ground, and with a band of iron and bronze, and in the grass outside, and it will lodge in the dew of heaven (v. 15): having fallen victim to madness, insanity, and mental disease, being deranged in a frenzy and raging against everyone, he had to be kept in chains, yet even these did not suffice to restrain him; he took to his heels and lived in the wilderness, suffering hardship in the open, and feeding on grass like cattle.¹¹¹ He suggested as much, in fact, by saying, His lot with the wild beasts, his heart in the grass of the earth, he will be alienated from human beings. A wild beast's heart will be given him, and seven times will pass over him (vv. 15–16). This indicates God's longsuffering: he will confine his punishment to a brief period, looking for a repentance that will be produced by his chastisement. He next brings out that the words are beyond dispute. The word comes by a decree of the watchman, and the question is a statement of holy ones (v. 17): the word is reliable, a holy angel the speaker, vigilant, incorporeal. It is not without purpose, he goes on, that it is said and comes to pass: It is for the living to know that the Most High is lord of the kingdom of human beings, and he gives it to whomever he pleases, and what is despised by human beings he raises up over it: this is what the

angel means, that the fate of the tree will come to pass for this purpose, for everyone to know through this that there is one | God, 1364
 Lord and King, who appoints kings on the earth and entrusts the kingdom to whomever he wishes. In fact, to bring out his own authority, he appoints as king the one who is at one time the most insignificant and thought to be of no value, and makes those of greatest rank obey him.

Having thus completed the account of the dream, he says to Daniel, This is the dream I, King Nebuchadnezzar, saw; and you, Belteshazzar, give the interpretation openly (v. 18), that is, truly and precisely, Because all the wise men of my kingdom are unable to disclose to me its interpretation, whereas you can. And to give the reason, Because the holy spirit of God is in you: whereas they have recourse to human reasoning, you learn hidden things from God. Then Daniel, who had the name Belteshazzar, was dismayed for a moment, and his thoughts were in disarray (v. 19). It was necessary, you see, for human weakness to be displayed, and at that point the charism of inspiration to be demonstrated. So the king said in reply, Belteshazzar, Do not let the dream and its interpretation upset you. He noticed him alarmed, you see, and necessarily encouraged him because he longed to learn what he did not know; so he says to him, There is no hurry, at your leisure find out what was conveyed in the dream, and make it clear to me.

So Belteshazzar said in reply, My lord king, may the dream be for those who hate you, and its interpretation for your enemies. It was very wise and intelligent of him to begin by deprecating any misfortunes for him and yet point out the truth. The tree that had grown to great size and strength, with its height reaching to heaven and its trunk across the whole earth, its foliage luxuriant, its fruit abundant, nourishment in it for all, with wild beasts dwelling under it and the birds of heaven taking shelter in its branches—it is you, O King (vv. 20–22). Daniel's wisdom is worth admiring: he did not say simply, The big tree, but Grown to great size and strength—in other words, Instead of being great from the beginning, you became great gradually, and instead of having strength from the outset, you gradually acquired it. Hence he goes further, Because you have grown great and strong, your greatness has increased, you reach to heaven and your lordship to the ends of the earth. It was very fitting and appropriate for him to relate these things to heaven and earth: he said his lordship had reached | the ends of the earth, 1365 that is, his authority, whereas it was not yet his lordship that had reached to heaven but his imaginings.

Because the king saw, he went on, an eir and holy one descending from heaven, and said, Cut down the tree and destroy it, but leave the stump of its roots in the ground, with a band of iron and bronze, in the grass outside, and it will lodge in the dew of heaven, and its lot is with the wild beasts until seven times pass over him. This is the interpretation, O King (vv. 23–24). And to make his words more trustworthy, he of necessity went on, It is a decree of the Most High that has come upon my lord the king. At this point it is possible to learn the value of the apostolic teaching, “Let every person be subject to the governing authorities”;¹¹² blessed Daniel, note, calls the impious king lord, and influenced by the norm of authority he adopts the appropriate titles, and he gives a glimpse of the truth of the dream, distressing though it is.

They will expel you from human company, your dwelling place will be with wild beasts, they will feed you grass like an ox, your body will be dipped in the dew of heaven, and seven times will pass over you (v. 25). Now, while some commentators claimed the seven times are seven years, others said three and a half. The divine Scripture, in fact, divides the year not into four seasons but into two more generic parts, winter and summer; so seven divisions of that kind amount to three and a half years.¹¹³ You will spend such a length of time in misfortune, he says, until you come to learn that the Most High has lordship over the kingdom of human beings and will give it to whomever he pleases: since you dream of being God—or, rather, even better than God—God will take from you even human reason and will make you resemble the beasts so that you may learn from experience what is man and what is God, what is human fortune and what is divine kingship, and the fact that it is impossible to attain it unless God wishes.

And because he said, Leave the trunk of the roots of the tree, your kingdom will remain for you from the time you acknowledge the kingdom of heaven (v. 26): after being deprived of the kingdom and enduring all that, you will acknowledge the provider of kingship; then, when you know him, you will in turn regain your former authority, so that by removal and restoration you will learn precisely who is the governor of everything, who it is who wisely guides and orders everything. Having foretold the future in this way, he offers exhortation and excellent advice, and applies a remedy suited to the wound. | Hence, O King, may my advice be acceptable to you; atone for your sins with almsgiving and for your iniquities with compassion for the poor (v. 27). In this he implies the insatiable cruelty with which he treated his subjects. Do you wish, he asks, to receive lovingkindness? Give evidence of it to those who share the same nature as you, this being the way you will persuade the judge to cancel his threat and leave it unfulfilled: Perhaps there will be long-suffering for your failings. 1368

While the prophet delivered this verdict, then, the other man continued to be unfeeling and inexorable, and so he received the wages of his lawlessness, and witnessed with his own eyes the sorrows of which he had heard. The text then conveys also the span of divine longsuffering: after the passage of twelve months the threat in the prophecy reached its factual conclusion. Though given such a length of time to repent, he failed to meet the deadline for repentance; it would be of him that blessed Paul spoke, “Do you despise the riches of his kindness, forbearance and longsuffering? Are you unaware that the kindness of God leads you to repentance? In your hard and impenitent heart, however, you are storing up wrath for yourselves on the day of wrath, revelation and right judgment by God, who will render to everyone according to each one’s works—eternal life to those who by perseverance in good works seek glory and honor and immortality, while anger and wrath will come to those who in self-seeking do not obey the truth but obey iniquity. There will be tribulation and distress for every person guilty of evildoing.”¹¹⁴

These events, you see, happened also to Nebuchadnezzar for not properly taking advantage of God’s lovingkindness; he himself testifies to it in what follows. After twelve months he was walking in the temple of his kingdom in Babylon and traversing the walls of the city and his towers in all his splendor. The king’s response was as follows: Is not this mighty Babylon, which I personally built as the house of the kingdom in the power of my strength for the honor of my glory? (vv. 29–30) Note the pretentious attitude, note the excess of arroκη'. «Ἔτι γὰρ, φησί, τοῦ λόγου ὄντος ἐν τῷ στόματι τοῦ βασιλέως, φωνὴ ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ ἐγένετο.» Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν ἀνελθεῖν ὠνειροπόλησεν, ἐκεῖθεν δέχεται τὴν ἀπόφασιν· καὶ ἐπειδὴ οὐκ ἀπέχρησεν αὐτῷ τὰ κάτω βασιλεία, ἀλλ' ἅμα καὶ τῶν ἄνω μανικῶς ἐπεθύμησεν, ἔρημος γίνεται καὶ τῶν κάτω· καὶ τὸν οὐρανὸν ἀρπάσαι θελήσας, καὶ τῆς γῆς ἐξελαύνεται. «Φωνὴ τοίνυν ἦλθεν ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ· Σοί, σοὶ λέγεται, Ναβουχοδονόσορ βασιλεῦ.» Ὁ δὲ τῆς ἀντωνυμίας διπλασιασμὸς οὐχ ἀπλῶς πρόσκειται, ἀλλ' εἰς ἔλεγχον ἐναργέστερον τοῦ πρὸς ὃν ταῦτα λέγεται. Καλεῖ δὲ αὐτὸν ἔτι βασιλέα, καὶ τὴν παροῦσαν ἔτι δόξαν, καὶ τὴν ἐσομένην οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἀτιμίαν δεικνύς.

«Ἡ βασιλεία σου, φησί, παρῆλθεν ἀπὸ σοῦ. (κθ'.) Καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων σε ἐκδιώξουσιν, καὶ μετὰ θηρίων ἀγρίων ἢ κατοικίᾳ σου καὶ χόρτον ὡς βοῦν ψωμιοῦσί σε, καὶ ἑπτὰ καιροὶ ἀλλαγῇσονται ἐπὶ σοί, ἕως οὗ γυνῶς, ὅτι κυριεύει ὁ Ὑψιστος τῆς βασιλείας τῶν ἀνθρώπων, καὶ ὃ ἐὰν δόξη, δώσει αὐτήν.» Εἴτα δεικνύς τὴν τῆς τιμωρίας ὀξύτητα, καὶ παραυτίκα, φησί, τῷ λόγῳ τὸ ἔργον ἐπηκολούθησεν.

λ'. «Αὐτῇ, φησί, τῇ ὥρᾳ συνετελέσθη ὁ λόγος ἐπὶ Ναβουχοδονόσορ, καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐδιώχθη.» Ἐξεδιώχθη δὲ πρῶτον μὲν δι' αὐτὸ τὸ πάθος· μανία γὰρ παρεδόθη καὶ λύττη καὶ μυρία ἂν εἰργάσατο κακά, εἴπερ ἀδείας ἀπήλαυσεν· ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ διὰ τὴν ἀπέχθειαν, ἣν περὶ αὐτὸν ἅπαντες ἔχοντες, ἡνίκα μὲν ἔρρωτο, ἐπειρῶντο λανθάνειν, συμφορᾷ δὲ περιπεσόντι ἐπέθεντο, τῆς ὀμότητος αὐτὸν βδελυζάμενοι. «Καὶ χόρτον ὡς βοῦς, φησὶν, ἦσθιεν.» Ἴδιον γὰρ τῶν παραπαιόντων, οὐ μόνον τὸ λέγειν καὶ πράττειν ἀλόγιστά τε καὶ ἄτακτα, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ἐσθίειν ἅπαντα τὰ προσπίπτοντα· τοῦτο δ' ἂν τις ἴδοι καὶ νῦν τοὺς ὑπὸ δαιμόνων ἐνοχλουμένους ποιοῦντας καὶ πάσχοντας. Οὐ μόνον δὲ ὡς βοῦς ἦσθιεν τὸν χόρτον, ἀλλὰ «Καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς δρόσου τοῦ οὐρανοῦ τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ ἐβάφθη.» Ὑπαίθριος γὰρ ταλαιπωρῶν, καὶ γυμνῷ τῷ σώματι κρυμῶ τε προσπαλαίων καὶ φλογμῶ, ἀναγκαίως ἐτέραν ἐδέξατο χροάν. «Ἔως οὗ αἱ τρίχες αὐτοῦ, ὡς λεόντων, ἐμεγαλύνθησαν, καὶ οἱ ὄνυχες αὐτοῦ, ὡς ὀρνέων.» Μὴ ἀποκειρόμενος γὰρ συνήθως, μηδὲ ἀφαιρούμενος τῶν ὀνύχων τὰ περιττά, ἀναγκαίως ἐν τοσούτῳ χρόνῳ τοιαύτας ἔσχθηκε καὶ τρίχας καὶ ὄνυχας. Διὰ δὲ τούτων ἀπάντων ἐσήμαινε τὸ ἀτμηλῆτον

gance. I myself built the royal city, he is saying, establishing the palace in it for the honor of my glory, and I did it with my mighty power, being also in control of everything. While he used such words in his unruly swaggering, however, the Lord God immediately brought retribution to bear. | While the words were still in the king's mouth, a voice came from heaven (v. 31): since he dreamed of going up to heaven, he received the verdict from there; and since he was not satisfied with the palace here below, and instead at the same time he insanely hankered after one on high, he was deprived of the one here below and in his wish to snatch heaven he was driven also from earth. 1369

So a voice came from heaven, To you, to you comes the verdict, King Nebuchadnezzar. The repetition of the pronoun was not accidental: it was for clearer proof of the one to whom this was addressed. He refers to him as still king and his glory as still current so as to highlight the dishonor that would not be long in coming. The kingdom has passed from you. They will hunt you from human company, your dwelling will be with the wild beasts, they will feed you grass like an ox, and seven times will pass over you until you acknowledge that the Most High has lordship of the kingdom of human beings, and will give it to whomever he pleases (vv. 31–32).

Then, to bring out the rapidity of the retribution, the event followed immediately on the word. At the same hour the sentence was fulfilled in Nebuchadnezzar's case. He was hunted from human company (v. 33). He was hunted, firstly, on account of the ailment itself: he fell victim to insanity and frenzy, and would have committed countless evils if he had been left to himself; and, secondly, also on account of the hostility all felt for him when he was well, trying to escape his notice, but when a victim of misfortune they attacked him, loathing him for his cruelty. He ate grass like an ox. It is typical of deranged people not only to say and do what is irrational and disorderly, but also to eat everything they come upon; even today you could see people possessed by demons acting and suffering this way. Not only was he in the habit of eating grass like an ox, however: his body was dipped in the dew of heaven: suffering from exposure, and struggling in his naked body with frost and heat, he inevitably took on a different color. Until his hair grew as long as lions' and his nails as long as birds': not grooming himself in the usual way or cutting his nails, over time he inevitably had hair and nails like this. By all this it suggested his condition of neglect

Διὸ καὶ ἀνέλαβον τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς μου εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, καὶ ἅμα τε τοῦτο ἐποίησα, « Καὶ αἱ φρένες μου ἐπεστράφησαν. » Ἀντὶ τοῦ, Τῆς παραφροσύνης ἐλεύθερος ἐγενόμην, καὶ τὸν λογισμὸν ἐρρώσθην· παραυτίκα δὲ ὑγιῆ τὸν νοῦν ἀπέλαβον. « Καὶ τῷ Ὑψίστῳ εὐλόγησα, καὶ τὸν ζῶντα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας ἤνεσα, ὅτι ἡ ἐξουσία αὐτοῦ ἐξουσία αἰώνιος, καὶ ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ εἰς γενεὰν καὶ γενεάν. » Γνοὺς γὰρ τῇ πείρᾳ, τί μὲν ἄνθρωπος, τί δὲ Θεός, τὸν μὲν Ὑψιστον καὶ ζῶντα προσαγορεύει, καὶ βασιλέα αἰώνιον ἀποκαλεῖ, τὴν δὲ οἰκείαν εὐτέλειαν ἐπιγινώσκει. λβ'. « Καὶ πάντες οἱ κατοικοῦντες τὴν γῆν εἰς οὐδὲν ἐλογίσθησαν. » Μέχρι μὲν γὰρ τοῦ παρόντος ὥμην εἶναι ἑμαυτὸν μέγιστόν τε καὶ ὑψηλότατον, νῦν δὲ ἔγνω σαφῶς, ὡς πᾶσα τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἡ φύσις Θεῷ παραβαλλομένη οὐδὲν ἐστὶ. Καὶ ζητήσας εὐτελείας προσηγορίαν, καὶ μὴ εὐρύων ἀξίαν, τὸ οὐδὲν τέθεικεν, ἔμφασιν ἔχον ἱκανὴν τοῦ σφαλεροῦ καὶ εὐδιαλύτου τῆς φύσεως. Καὶ τὸν μὲν Θεὸν καὶ Ὑψιστον, καὶ Δεσπότην, καὶ ζῶντα καὶ βασιλέα αἰώνιον ἀπεκάλεσεν, ἅπαντας δὲ ἀνθρώπους οὐδὲν προσηγόρευσε. Οὕτω δὲ καὶ ὁ μακάριος Ἡσαΐας τοῖς εἰδώλοις τὴν θείαν παραβάλλων φύσιν, τὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων εἰς μέσον παρήγαγε γένος.

and carelessness: bereft of divine providence, he was not even a recipient of care from his own—wife, children, kith and kin; instead, like a wild animal he kept frequenting uninhabited places, filling his stomach with the food of brute beasts. In fact, since “though human | and enjoying great pomp, he had no sense, being comparable rather to irrational cattle, and being like them,”¹¹⁵ and since he gave free rein to a wild manner toward his subjects, it was very right and proper that he should be condemned to the life of cattle and wild animals. 1372

The loving Lord, however, terminated the punishment in his goodness; after teaching him by experience that it is he who is the Lord of all, in turn he brought him back and entrusted his former kingdom to him. At the end of that time, the text goes on, I, Nebuchadnezzar, lifted my eyes to heaven (v. 34). He inserted the word I, not by accident, but to teach all people, I am the one who had shown that awful arrogance, who had said Who is the god who will save you from my hands? and who dreamed of ascending to heaven and putting my throne above the stars, and I was taught my proper place by experience, learned through punishment to come to my senses, and acknowledged my position as a slave. Hence I lifted up my eyes to heaven, and as soon as I did so, my reason returned to me, that is, I was rid of my derangement and came to my senses, and immediately I became of sound mind again.

I blessed the Most High and praised the one who lives forever, because his authority is an eternal authority, and his kingdom from generation to generation. Knowing from experience what man is, and what God is, on the one hand he gave him the name Most High and living, and called him eternal king, and on the other he acknowledged his own insignificance. Hence he says, All the inhabitants of the earth were reckoned as nothing (v. 35): up to the present I thought myself very great and elevated, whereas now I know clearly that all human nature is nothing compared to God. Having sought a term for insignificance and not found one suitable, he used nothing, which gives a sufficient clue to the instability and impermanence of nature; while calling God Most High, Lord, living and eternal king, he spoke of all human beings as nothing. In similar fashion also blessed Isaiah in comparing the divine nature with the idols focused on human nature: “If all the nations are

«Εἰ γὰρ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, φησὶν, ὡς σταγῶν ἀπὸ κάδου, καὶ ὡς ῥοπῇ ζυγοῦ ἐλογίσθησαν, καὶ ὡς σίελος λογισθήσονται· ὁ δὲ Λίβανος οὐχ ἱκανὸς εἰς καῦσιν, καὶ πάντα τὰ τετράποδα οὐχ ἱκανὰ εἰς ὀλοκάρπωσιν, καὶ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη εἰς οὐδὲν εἰσι, καὶ εἰς οὐδὲν ἐλογίσθησαν αὐτῶ· τί-

Ὁ γὰρ μακάριος Δαβὶδ λέγει· «Πάντα ὅσα ἠθέλησεν ὁ Κύριος, ἐποίησεν ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ καὶ ἐν τῇ γῇ.» Τοῦτο καὶ οὗτος κηρύττει. «Ἄ γὰρ θέλει, φησί, καὶ ἐν τῇ δυνάμει τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ ἐν τῇ κατοικίᾳ τῆς γῆς,» πρυτανεύει καὶ δεσπόζει, οὐ μόνον τῆς γῆς, ἀλλὰ δὴ καὶ αὐτῶν τῶν οὐρανῶν. Εἶτα καὶ ἄμαχον δεικνύς τῆς δυνάμεως· «Καὶ οὐκ ἔστι, φησὶν, ὃς ἀντιστήσεται τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἔρεϊ αὐτῷ· Τί τοῦτο ἐποίησας;» Ἀνάγκη γὰρ στέργειν τὰ ὑπ' αὐτοῦ γινόμενα, ἐάν τε θυμῆρη, ἐάν τε ἀλγεινὰ ᾗ· τολμηρὸν γὰρ τὸ ἀντιτείνειν, καὶ αἰτιᾶσθαι τὰ ὑπ' αὐτοῦ σοφῶς πρυτανευόμενα. Ταῦτα, φησί, γνοὺς καὶ ὁμολογήσας, καὶ τὸν Ὑψιστον δοξάσας, εἰς ἐμαυτὸν ἐπανῆλθον, καὶ τὴν προτέραν βασιλείαν μετ' εὐσεβείας ἀπέλαβον.

λγ'. «Αὐτῷ γὰρ τῷ καιρῷ αἱ φρένες μου ἐστράφησαν πρὸς με, καὶ εἰς τὴν τιμὴν τῆς βασιλείας μου ἦλθον, καὶ ἡ μορφή μου ἐπέστρεψεν ἐπ' ἐμέ.» Αὐχμῶν γὰρ, ὡς εἰκός, καὶ ῥυπῶν, ἀποκειράμενος καὶ τὰ περιττὰ τῶν ὀνύχων ἀφελόμενος, καὶ τὸν ῥύπον ἀπονιψάμενος, καὶ τῆς θείας χάριτος ἀπολαύσας, ἐπεγνώσθη ὅτι ἄνθρωπος ᾗν ἐκεῖνος, ὁ πρότερον τὴν μεγίστην διέπων βασιλείαν. «Καὶ οἱ τύραννοί μου, φησί, καὶ οἱ μεγιστᾶνές μου ἐπεζήτουν με.» Ἀποθέμενοι γὰρ κἀκεῖνοι τὸ μῖσος, διάθεσιν περὶ ἐμέ καὶ φίλτρον ἔλαβον. «Καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν βασιλείαν μου ἐκραταιώθην, καὶ μεγαλωσύνη περισσοτέρα προσετέθη μοι.» Καὶ τοῦτο δὲ πάλιν εὐσεβείας γέμει τὸ ῥῆμα· οὐ γὰρ εἶπε, Μεγαλωσύνην περισσοτέραν ἐκτησάμην, ἀλλὰ, «Προσετέθη μοι,» τὸν χορηγὸν ὑποδεικνύς, καὶ τῶν ἀγαθῶν κηρύττων τὸν αἴτιον.

λδ'. «Νῦν οὖν, φησὶν, ἐγὼ Ναβουχοδονόσορ αἰνῶ, καὶ ὑψῶ, καὶ δοξάζω τὸν βασιλέα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, ὅτι πάντα τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ ἀληθινὰ, καὶ αἱ τρίβοι αὐτοῦ κρίσεις, καὶ πάντας τοὺς πορευομένους ἐν ὑπερηφάνιᾳ δύνανται ταπεινῶσαι.» Λαβὼν γὰρ πεῖραν τῶν λυπηρῶν, εἶτα τούτων like a drop from a bucket, and are accounted as a turn of the scale, and will be accounted as spittle, while Lebanon is not sufficient for burning, and all its animals not sufficient for a burnt offering, and all the nations are nothing, and were reckoned as nothing in comparison with him, to what will you liken the Lord? and with what analogy compare him?"¹¹⁶

This was the kind of benefit Nebuchadnezzar drew from the misfortunes, thinking and speaking of God in inspired mode; as though from some harmony | drawn from creation he composes 1373 his complete hymn of praise. All the inhabitants of the earth were reckoned as nothing; he acts according to his will in the might of heaven and in the populace of earth. This is also the teaching of another author: as blessed David said, "All that the Lord wished he did in heaven and on earth,"¹¹⁷ so he too proclaims, He acts according to his will in the might of heaven and in the populace of earth, governing and controlling, not only earth but even the very heavens as well. Then, to bring out the invincibility of his power, There is no one who will oppose his hand or say to him, Why did you do that? One must accept gladly what is done by him, be it pleasing or distressing: resisting or criticizing what is wisely ordained by him is a rash endeavor.

After realizing and confessing this, and glorifying the Most High, he came to himself and resumed his former reign in a godly spirit. At that time my reason returned to me, I returned to the position of my reign, and my condition was restored to me (v. 36). Squalid and dirty, in all likelihood, unkempt and with nails grown long, he washed away the dirt, and thanks to divine grace he was recognized as the person who previously had administered the mighty kingdom. My rulers and my nobility sought me out: they put aside their hatred and adopted a friendly attitude to me. I took control of the kingdom, and further greatness was added to me. This remark also is redolent of godliness: he did not say, I acquired further greatness, but it was added to me, hinting at the source and proclaiming the one responsible for the good things. So now I, Nebuchadnezzar, praise and exalt and glorify the king of heaven, because all his works are true, his ways are judgments, and he is able to bring low all who proceed haughtily (v. 37): having had experience of misfortune, and then being rid of it, I sing the praises of the one who to my advantage brought upon me one condition and the other in his great wisdom. I know he is the king of heaven and Lord of all, acting in truth, governing everything justly, and capable of humbling those behaving haughtily.

Learning how arrogance and conceit bring harm on those so affected, therefore, and that the one who takes satisfaction in them reaps a harvest that is not good, let us acquire humility, the mother of good things. | This acquisition it is, after all, that the Lord 1376 blesses as winning the kingdom of heaven for its investor: “Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.” He also offers himself as a model to those willing to gain from it: “Learn from me that I am gentle and humble in heart”; and to bring out the fruit of this, he immediately went on to say, “And you will find rest for your souls.”¹¹⁸ Now, if the creator and Lord of all calls himself humble and proves it in his deeds, what further advice is needed for a human being who is dust, clay, soil, ashes, futility, flower, grass—all being names given us by the divine Scripture? Let us therefore be ashamed in the face of the Lord’s modesty: though rich he became poor for our sake so that we might become rich through his poverty.¹¹⁹ Let us learn the mortality of nature, and perceiving the brevity of happiness here below, let us come to no grandiose ideas about the present life—or, rather, let us mock its mutability and impermanence, and long to acquire those good things which are by nature lasting and abiding. May it be the good fortune of us all to attain this, thanks to the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit be glory, now and forever, for ages of ages. Amen.

King Belshazzar made a great feast for his nobles (v. 1). This man was the son of Nebuchadnezzar, but did not directly succeed him: his brother Evil-merodach, being the older, came to the throne,¹²⁰

as the story of the Kings informs us, as also blessed Jeremiah in these words, “In the thirty-seventh year of the exile of King Jehoiachin of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the twenty-fourth day of the month, Evil-merodach king of Babylon in the year he came to the throne showed favor to King Jehoiachin of Judah, brought | him out of the house where he was under guard, spoke to him 1377 kindly, and gave him a seat above the thrones of the kings who were with him in Babylon. He changed out of his prison garb, and adopted the habit of eating his meals in his presence all the days he lived.”¹²¹ Now, this Jehoiachin is also Jeconiah; his father was Jehoiakim, also known as Eliakim, in whose time Daniel was enslaved, and who was killed in Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, who cast him outside the walls, as the divine Scripture informs us.¹²²

After Nebuchadnezzar, then, Evil-merodach ruled, and after him Belshazzar. The most divine Daniel, however, omitted mention of the former man, since he was composing not history pure and simple but prophecy—hence his not recording everything done by Nebuchadnezzar, either, but only those things of which mention was required with a view to bringing benefit. So since also in the time of Belshazzar God gave evidence of a wonderful miracle capable of instilling reverence and dread not only in the people of that time but also in those of any later time and of leading them to the true religion, he did not think it right to conceal in silence such a great act of kindness, judging it instead a holy thing to put it in writing and leave for everyone a record of the teaching.

Hence the text reads, King Belshazzar made a great feast for a thousand of his nobles, and there was drinking in the presence of the nobles, that is, enough for a thousand, prepared for such a large number. In his drinking Belshazzar gave orders while tasting the wine for the gold and silver vessels to be brought in that his father and Labashi-marduk also omitted after Evil-merodach, as they are in the Bible) and never really king. The passage of a couple of decades covering these reigns in which Daniel is still a survivor also encourages collapsing them. The brotherly relationship mentioned here may have arisen from the possibility that Belshazzar’s mother was the daughter of Nebuchadnezzar.

Nebuchadnezzar carried off from the temple in Jerusalem. The king, his nobles, his wives and his concubines drank from them (v. 2).¹²³ In this the prophet teaches us not only the extent of the impiety but also the harm coming from excess in drinking: In his drinking the king gave orders while tasting the wine for the gold and silver vessels to be brought in. In other words, intoxication confused his thinking, and intemperance gave rise to this insane action against God: the vessels consecrated to the worship of God, which his father Nebuchadnezzar had seized when God surrendered them, but had honored in the way he thought fit and had kept from human use, this man presumed to use like ordinary vessels, not only giving the order but giving effect to the order.

The gold and silver vessels were brought in that Nebuchadnezzar had taken from the temple of God in Jerusalem (v. 3). He did well to bring out the height of the impropriety by mentioning God in addition to the temple, | and adding the name Jerusalem to highlight the fame of the temple: These vessels were consecrated (it is saying), not just to what seem to be gods that possess the bare name, but actually to the God of all, who chose Jerusalem and filled its temple with his characteristic glory. Yet these vessels, not for human touch, consecrated to the God of all—not that he needed them, accepting rather the gratitude of the offerers—the impious king exposed to public view and drank with them. Not only he himself but also his nobles, his wives, and his concubines drank wine—in other words, he turned the instruments of divine worship into instruments of drunkenness, and bade those satisfying his lusts enjoy the wine in them. Then, to give a glimpse of the extreme degree of the impiety, the prophet went on, They sang the praises of the gods of gold, silver, bronze, iron, wood, and stone (v. 4). The utterly loathsome drunkard wallowed in the divine vessels and gave no thought to the Lord of all, celebrating in song false gods made of lifeless wood and devoid of even artificial movement, representing only a form without any mobility.

The one who governs all things, however, could not allow the people of the time and those coming later to be harmed by his longsuffering; and immediately he revealed his peculiar might. At that very hour fingers emerged from a human hand and began to

Τούτῳ δὲ καταπλήξας καὶ δέος ἐνθετικῶς, write near the lampstand on the plaster of the wall of the king's house. The king saw the fingers of the hand that was writing (v. 5). Since, you see, he had sung the praises of the idols, deprived as they were of any power to move, and had scorned the God of all, the Lord of all gives him a lesson in his invisible and incorporeal nature by letting him see only fingers writing, the purpose being to instruct him that he would not even see them were it not that he personally had provided the occasion of need. His fellow diners also got great benefit from it through being given a lesson in God's power, in addition to his being incorporeal and invisible, by contrast with the gods celebrated by them, totally inactive and weak as they were, in addition to being wooden and lifeless.

The fact that this marvel instilled deep fear in everyone the prophet has confirmed, speaking in these terms, At that point the king's face turned pale, his thoughts alarmed him, the sinews of his loins loosened, and his knees knocked together (v. 6). Now, if the sight of fingers writing so terrified the | governor of the great kingdom that the coordination of his limbs failed through fear and his legs were affected by fear and trembling, what would this hater of God not have suffered on experiencing thunder and lightning, or angels of grim aspect instilling terror with the novelty of their appearance? Not even the mighty Daniel could bear the vision of these things unmoved. In truth, "Why will dust and ashes be proud?"¹²⁴ He was therefore struck with such terror that he cried out in a loud voice to bring in soothsayers, astrologers, and fortune tellers (v. 7), fear causing the cry and a panic-stricken soul pressing him to learn the meaning of the vision. He then offers to anyone reading the writing and supplying the interpretation a prize of royal apparel, a golden chain and occupying the third place after the king. 1381

The godlessness of the soothsayers and astrologers was put to the test, for they were unable to unravel the text of the divine script, despite such a prize being on offer to urge them on. King Belshazzar was alarmed, his face turned pale, and his nobles were alarmed with him (v. 9). From this it is clear that the Lord was concerned for the welfare of the others and did not take the king's life on the spot, instead giving a glimpse of the writer's fingers. But having startled him by this and instilled fear, he caused the wise men of the Chaldeans to be summoned, and showed up their falsity and weakness, while producing the need for Daniel's wisdom so as through his tongue to accredit him and benefit the others, and with this happening to inflict punishment at that stage on the impious king. When the king and the guests were alarmed, then, Amidst the king's and his nobles' words the queen entered the banqueting hall (v. 10), that is, with them pondering what should be done, and various people making various suggestions under pressure of fear, the queen entered. Now, in my view, this lady was his mother:¹²⁵ the wives were attending the banquet along with the concubines, and drinking from the gold and silver vessels was himself and his nobles, his wives—that is, his spouses—and his concubines, partners of his not by law but in lust. Now, this lady entered after the hubbub, and being old she probably was not a party at that stage to the drunkenness and antics, or dancing, at any rate. In response the queen said, O King, live forever! This was probably an introduction offered at that time to | kings by their subjects; even to this day this custom prevails: some stupid people are in the habit of using the word eternal of the kings of today, and in contracts some add it in writing under the influence of ignorance rather than impiety. 1384

The queen said, therefore, Do not let your thoughts disturb you, or your face change color. She then goes on to give the reason to expel fear: There is a man in your kingdom who has a holy spirit of God in him, and in the days of your father alertness and understanding were found in him (v. 11). Now, it is possible to understand from this as well that she was rather his mother; hence she informs him also of ancient happenings as though unfamiliar, acquainting him with blessed Daniel, stating her belief that he was filled with a divine spirit, and using the actual words of Nebuchadnezzar, who had said this of Daniel, remember.¹²⁶ She added, In the days of your father alertness and understanding were found in him. Now, by alertness she referred to vigilance of soul, and by understanding to a grasp of hidden things and an insight into what escaped many. Your father King Nebuchadnezzar, she went on, made him chief of magicians, soothsayers, astrologers, and fortune tellers, adding the reason, because an extraordinary spirit was in him (v. 12), that is, he has the surpassing grace of the Spirit.

She next lists the kinds of spiritual activity: good sense, understanding, interpretation of dreams, reporting conundrums, solving problems, Daniel: having become a receptacle of the divine Spirit, he gives wise advice on everything, makes intelligent utterances on everything, clarifies riddles in dreams, removes the obscurity from what is hidden in some obscurity, and by setting free what is held in bondage in secret recesses, as it were, he undoes and releases it like shackles and seals of a kind, admitting to it all who wish (the meaning of reporting conundrums and solving problems, Daniel). Hence she goes on, The king gave him the name Belteshazzar: since he saw he was enlightened by a divine impulse, he accorded him the name of his god. So now let Daniel be summoned, and he will announce to you its interpretation. She did not say, Let Belteshazzar be summoned: knowing from experience the prophet's powers, they preferred the Hebrew name to the Chaldean, hence calling him from then on by the name Daniel.

Then Daniel came into | the king's presence, and the king said 1385 to Daniel, Are you Daniel, one of the children of the Jewish captivity? (v. 13). He seems for reasons of deep impiety to have shunned the company of Daniel after the death of his father. Hence as soon as he was struck with fear, he summoned the soothsayers and the astrologers, while also expelling from his mind memory of the prophet; but when his mother reminded him of the miracles worked in the time of his father, and Daniel was summoned and came in, he recognized him at once. After all, had he not known him, he would not have recalled his nationality and brought to the fore the captivity of Judah. Nevertheless, he questions him in the words, Are you Daniel, one of the Jewish captivity? And while he had still to admit it, he said, I have heard of you that a holy spirit is in you, and alertness, intelligence, and extraordinary wisdom were found in you (v. 14). What the inspired author said of Israel is consistent also with what is said of this man, "When he killed them, they sought him out":¹²⁷ it was fear of the divine power, note, that forced him to give the name God to the true God in place of those not really gods, to praise the grace of the Holy Spirit, to accuse the wise men of Babylon of being unable to read the divine script, and to appeal to God's prophet to reveal the unknown. He also promises to give him the purple, the chain, and third place in the kingdom.

Blessed Daniel, however, replied to him in mockery of the royal promises of the impious man, Keep your presents, and give the gift of your house to someone else. I shall read the script for the king, and inform you of its interpretation, O King (v. 17). A truly New Testament reply from Old Testament authors: the Lord, remember, in sending those heralds to all people gave them the following directions, "You received without payment, give without payment."¹²⁸ And this blessed prophet said to the king, Keep your presents, and give the gift of your house to someone else. I shall read the script to the king, and inform you of its interpretation, O King: I am not in the habit of selling divine things, or of taking payment from human beings for the divine mysteries; so receive the knowledge of the unknown without charge. God the Most High gave your father Nebuchadnezzar kingdom, magnificence, honor, and glory. On the basis of the glory he gave him, all people, tribes, and languages were in awe of him and trembled in his presence (vv. 18–19): do not think it was by relying on his own strength that your father subjected the whole world and | brought under one kingdom the countless 1388 races of the nations speaking various tongues. It was, in fact, the Lord of all, maker of everything, wise governor of all things, who gave him the kingdom, and it was as a result of the divine decree that fear of your father possessed his subjects. He elevated those he wanted, and humbled those he wanted: he received such great authority from God as to be able to set those in an elevated position in a lowly one, and make those very obscure and insignificant famous.

When his heart was lifted up and his spirit gained strength to the point of becoming haughty, he was deposed from the throne of his kingdom (v. 20): just as he elevated those he wanted, and humbled those he wanted, doing so not altogether by a right decision, so the King and Lord of all gave your father the kingdom as he wanted, but on perceiving him giving vent to an overweening sense of his own importance, running the kingdom in an arrogant and conνόσον δεζόμενον, καὶ τῶν βασιλικῶν αὐτὸν ἐστέρησε θρόνων, καὶ τὴν παρὰ πάντων αὐτῷ προσφερομένην τιμὴν ἀφείλετο. Οὐ μόνως δὲ αὐτὸν τῆς βασιλείας ἐγύμνωσε, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν κοινῶν συλλόγων ἐξήλασε, καὶ φρενοβλαβεία καὶ λύττη παραδούς, ὅνοις ἀγρίοις καὶ θηρίοις συνδιάγειν παρεσκεύασεν. Ὡς γὰρ τὸ ἄγριον ἐμιμήσατο, τούτων τὸν βίον ἐδέξατο. Ἀναμιμνήσκει δὲ αὐτόν, ὅτι καὶ πόαν ἤσθιεν δίκην βοῶν, καὶ γυμνὸς περινοστῶν, καὶ ὑπαίθριος ταλαιπωρῶν, τὴν μὲν προτέραν τοῦ σώματος ἀπέβαλε χροάν, ἐτέραν δὲ εἰσεδέξατο, ἣν ὁ κρυμὸς τε καὶ ὁ φλογμὸς ἀπειργάσατο. ceited manner, a victim of haughtiness, he deprived him of the royal throne and stripped him of the honor paid him by everyone. Instead of divesting him only of the kingdom, however, he drove him also from normal association, gave him over to insanity and derangement, and caused him to live with wild asses and savage beasts, taking on the life of the animals whose ferocity he had imitated. He reminds him that he also ate grass like oxen, roaming about naked, suffering exposure, losing the original color of his body and taking on a different one as a result of the cold and heat. He endured all this, he said, until he learned that the Most High has lordship of the kingdom of human beings and awards it to whomever he pleases (v. 21).

That man for his part learned his proper place by experience, and he was instructed by actual events that nothing human is stable, whereas the God of all has everlasting control, governs human affairs as he wishes, and offers the gift of kingship to whomever he wishes. You, on the other hand, he went on, his son Belshazzar, by not humbling your heart before God, have not learned all this (v. 22):¹²⁹ you were not brought to your senses by your father's troubles, nor were you prepared to learn God's power through what he suffered. Instead, you have elevated yourself above the Lord of heaven (v. 23). He did well to instruct those present to worship not visible things but their creator and Lord. At the same time he also convicts the king of conceit, and teaches him that the highest heaven has for its creator the unseen God. You, he is saying, | made your heart more elevated, not than heaven, but than the God of heaven, the Lord of all creation; if you were not guilty of such awful conceit, you would not have ordered the vessels of his house to be brought in. You, your nobles, your wives, and your concubines drank wine from them, that is, you used for drunkenness and intoxication the vessels consecrated to God.

Then, to mock the enormity of his impiety, he says, You sang the praises of the gods of gold, silver, bronze, iron, wood, and stone; and persisting in the mockery, which do not see, do not hear, and do not know: you were actually capable of realizing their inability to act on the basis of the material, the skill applied to it, and in addition to this their limbs' lack of senses. After all, they were devoid of knowledge, sight, and hearing, with no single sense operating, being only bare images. Even this, however, did not persuade you to acknowledge your duty; instead, you persisted in singing the praises of gods incapable of any benefit. By contrast, the God in whose hand is your very breath and all your ways you did not glorify. Now, he did well and showed much wisdom in putting in parallel the idols and the God of all with a view to the benefit felt by the hearers; after emphasizing that the former neither see nor hear, instead of proceeding to say in regard to the God of all that he sees and hears and knows, he cited the more powerful fact of all, Your life and your ways are in his hand, since providing life to others and in turn removing it at will is more important than having life. He brought out, then, that while the idols are deprived of life and all sensation, the Lord God of all is the source of all life, and both gives it and takes it, governing as he wills. Nevertheless, he is saying, despite his being of this stature, so great, with power of life and death, appointing kings and removing them, you not only did not sing his praises, but rather even persisted in your drunken behavior, making fun of vessels dedicated to him.

This was the reason a finger of a hand was sent from his presence and put this writing in place (v. 24). He did not say, He wrote, but a finger of a hand was sent from his presence, that is, he gave orders for it to be written. He did not show you the whole of the person who wrote it, he is saying; instead, in his wish to convict you of conceit, he startled you with fingers alone, and filled you with an awful dread. Acquaint yourself with the text itself and the interpretation of the text. This, then, is the text: Mane, Thekel, Phares, and this is the interpretation of the expression (vv. 25–26). By interpretation | he refers to the meaning. Mane: God has measured your kingdom and brought it to an end, that is, He has seen you are unworthy of kingship, and he decided to leave you bereft of it. Thekel: he was weighed in the balance, and found wanting (v. 27). In this the prophet taught not only him but also us the lesson that nothing goes unweighed by God; instead, mercy and longsuffering are shown to people according to a certain measure and weight. Since, then, he is saying, you exceeded the limit of lovingkindness, receive the divine sentence. Phares: your kingdom has been divided,

and has been given to Medes and Persians (v. 28).¹³⁰

Now, it is necessary to enquire why on earth the God of all corrected Nebuchadnezzar and in turn restored him to his kingdom, but forthwith deprived this man of both kingdom and life. On consideration, then, we find, firstly, that Nebuchadnezzar had not observed another person paying the penalty for impiety, and hence God's just sentence granted him pardon, whereas this other man, though observing his father's heavy penalty, gained nothing from it. The just judge was therefore within his rights in confining punishment of the former to a specified time, whereas he granted the latter no pardon. In particular, God foresees all future events, and thus knows them clearly as if already in the past; so he knew ahead of time the repentance of the former, and arranged for his fate accordingly, whereas he knew ahead of time the latter's incorrigible impiety, and put a stop to the increase in impiety with death.

As soon as Belshazzar heard the interpretation by Daniel, he ordered that he receive the reward proposed, the purple and the gold chain. Then, after decking him out in this fashion, he used the proclamation of a herald to inform his subjects that he appointed him third ruler of the kingdom. None of this, however, mitigated the sentence. On that very night, the text says, Belshazzar king of the Chaldeans was slain (v. 30). He called him Chaldean here to emphasize that it was now the end of the Chaldean kingdom.

It is truly "a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," according to the divine apostle, "to despise the riches of his kindness, forbearance and longsuffering," and not to worship and serve him to the extent of one's ability. I mean, what person with heart hardened, as the inspired author asks, could stand in the presence of the Lord? Hence blessed David's exhortation, "If today you hear his voice, harden not your hearts as though in provocation." Interpreting this, blessed Paul exhorts us, "Take care, | brethren, that there be in you no wicked heart of unbelief to 1393 make you turn away from the living God. Rather, encourage one another every day, as long as it is called today, lest any of you be hardened by the deceitfulness of sin."¹³¹ Sin, you see, often has the effect of enticing us with pleasure: like that senseless king in his drunkenness, so it can harden our heart and make it stubborn to such a degree that it even succumbs with ease to the ailment of impiety. Let us therefore shun, I beseech you, the devil's wiles and give preference to lasting virtue over sin that involves a brief delight, so that we may have no part in the lot of Belshazzar and share rather the company of Daniel, in Christ Jesus our Lord, to whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit be glory, for ages of ages. Amen.

¹³⁰ Even with his Syriac background, Theodoret makes no comment on the three forms he finds in Theodotion's text (they do not occur in the LXX, only the interpretation), or on the accuracy of Daniel's interpretation of them; instead, he moves at once to rationalize the difference in penalties suffered by Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar. Di Lella ("Daniel," 414) tells us that the three consonantal forms occurring in the Aramaic text Daniel apparently read first as monetary values, the mina, the shekel, the half mina, before interpreting them as verbs, "he counted/weighed/divided," and that the forms appearing in Greek as μηνή and φάρές may in an older form of the conundrum have involved a pun on Medes and Persians, mention of whom Theodoret will not deal with at this point.

Darius the Mede succeeded to the kingdom at the age of sixty-two. The kingdom of the Chaldeans came to an end according to the divine prophecy, and control of the world passed to the Medes. This is what Daniel also had prophesied in interpreting Phares, saying, Your kingdom has been divided, and has been given to Medes and Persians. Darius the Mede reigned for a short time,¹³² however, and ¹³¹ Heb 10:31; Rom 2:4; Ps 95:7–8; Heb 3:12–13. The opening verse of chapter 6 (in the Aramaic and in Theodotion) appears as 5:31 in modern versions.

¹³² Theodoret now addresses the historical problems raised by the mention of the nonhistorical personage "Darius the Mede." Unwilling to admit that the author has fabricated this figure, Theodoret surveys (particularly biblical) statements about leaders of Medes and Persians, going back as far as Cyaxares king of the Medes in the seventh century and Astyages in the sixth (not father and son); the latter was grandfather of Cyrus, whose father Cambyses was Persian, and who toppled Astyages to become head of a combined Median-Persian Empire in 550. Theodoret is confused by the fictitious Darius in Dan 5:31, his being mentioned again in 6:28 as contemporary with "Cyrus the Persian," and the similarly erroneous statement he cites from Josephus, Ant. 10.248, of Darius and Cyrus working in concert. The result is that he has Darius I as son (not father) of Xerxes I (Ahasuerus), probably on the basis of 9:1—or is he thinking of Darius II son of Xerxes II (a mistake he appears to make in his work on the

Cyrus received the reins of government and transferred control to the Persians. Josephus the historian says that, while Darius was the son of Astyages and uncle of Cyrus, Greek writers give him a different name, calling him Cyaxares. He says that Darius and his nephew Cyrus advanced on Babylon together and gained control of it by besieging it, and they slew Belshazzar on the night he saw those syllables written on the wall. |

What was recorded by blessed Daniel, however, does not allow us to accept this: he informs us at the end of the account of Darius that Daniel was prospering in the reign of Darius and in the reign of Cyrus the Persian, showing that the reign of Darius was different from that of Cyrus. If, on the other hand, there were one army that came against Babylon, surely there would have been one kingdom as well; but at this point he distinguishes between them. At the end of his work Daniel speaks in the following terms, “King Astyages was taken to his fathers, and Cyrus the Persian succeeded to the throne.”¹³³ So Darius and Cyrus did not reign at the same time and kill Belshazzar; instead, Darius son of Ahasuerus ruled first, and Cyrus later. The statements by Josephus do not correspond to the Greek histories, either: it is not possible to find in them Cyaxares son of Astyages to be the same person as Darius, whom the other historian said conducted a campaign against Babylon along with Cyrus. The result is that the word of Josephus is completely incredible.

I for my part, on the contrary, put my trust in the divine Scripture, and find this man Darius to be the son of Nebuchadnezzar’s daughter. In bidding Jeremiah put chains on, remember, and send them to the neighboring kings of the Idumeans, Moabites, Ammonites, Tyrians, and Sidonians, God told him to say this to them, “Thus says the Lord God of Israel, You will say this to your masters, I made the earth with my great strength and my outstretched arm, and shall give it to whoever is pleasing in my eyes. I have given the whole land to King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon to serve him, and all the nations will serve him, his son and his son’s υἱῷ αὐτοῦ, καὶ τῷ υἱῷ τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ, ἕως ἂν ἔλθῃ ὁ καιρὸς τῆς γῆς αὐτῶν. » Τοῦ τοίνυν Βαλτάσαρ υἱοῦ προσαγορευθέντος ὑπὸ τοῦ Δανιήλ, ζητητέον τὸν ἔκγονον. Εἰ δέ τις ἀντιλέγει, Μῆδον τὸν Δαρεῖον ὀνομάζεσθαι λέγων, μαθέτω ὡς οὐδὲν τοῦτο τῷ λόγῳ λυμαίνεται. Καὶ γὰρ ὁ Κῦρος θυγατριδοῦς ὢν τοῦ Ἀστυάγου, ὃς Μῆδος ἦν, καὶ Μήδων ἐβασίλευσε, Πέρσης ὀνομάζεται· ἐκ γὰρ τῆς πατρῴας συγγενείας φιλοῦσιν οἱ ἄνθρωποι τὰς ἐθνικὰς τιθέναι προσηγορίας. Εἰκὸς τοίνυν καὶ τὸν Δαρεῖον εἶναι μὲν Μήδου πατρός, Χαλδαίας δὲ μητρός, καλεῖσθαι δὲ τοῦτο ὅπερ ἦν ὁ πατήρ. Εἰ δ' οὐχ οὕτως ταῦτ' ἔχει, δειζάτωσαν οἱ βουλόμενοι τοῦ Ναβουχοδονόσορ τὸν ἔκγονον τῆς παππῶας βασιλείας κληρονομήσαντα, καὶ οὐδὲν περὶ τούτου ζυγομαχῆσομεν. Ὅτι γὰρ παναληθῆς τοῦ μεγάλου Ἱερεμίου ἡ πρόρρησις, πᾶς τις εὖ φρονῶν ὁμολογήσειεν. Εἰ δέ τιτι προΐσταται μὴ εἶναι θυγατριδοῦν τοῦ Ναβουχοδονόσορ τὸν Δαρεῖον, ἀλλ' ὑἱδοῦν, διὰ τὸ τὸν προφήτην εἰρηκέναι· «Δουλεύουσιν αὐτῷ, | καὶ τῷ υἱῷ αὐτοῦ, καὶ τῷ υἱῷ τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ.» μαθέτω τῆς θείας Γραφῆς τὸ ἰδίωμα· ἐξ ἁρρένων γὰρ γενεαλογεῖν εἰωθυῖα, καὶ τὸν ἔκγονον εἰπεῖν ἐθελήσασα, υἱὸν τοῦ υἱοῦ προσηγόρευσεν. Ἀλλ' ὅτι μὲν τοῦ υἱοῦ οὐκ ἔστιν υἱός, ὁ μακάριος Δανιήλ μαρτυρεῖ, λέγων· «Δαρεῖος ὁ Μῆδος παρέλαβε τὴν βασιλείαν.» Ὅτι δὲ μέχρις ἐκγόνων παραπέμψει τὴν βασιλείαν ὁ Ναβουχοδονόσορ, ὁ θεὸς προεῖπεν Ἱερεμίας. Ἐξ ἑκατέρας τοίνυν προφητείας εὐρεῖν δυνατὸν τὸ ἀληθές· ἐκ μὲν τῆς Ἱερεμίου, ὅτι καὶ ὁ ἔκγονος τοῦ Ναβουχοδονόσορ τῆς βασιλείας ἀνθέξεται· ἐκ δὲ τῆς τοῦ μακαρίου Δανιήλ, ὅτι Βαλτάσαρ τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Ναβουχοδονόσορ, τῇ θείᾳ ψήφῳ τελευτήσαντος, Δαρεῖος ὁ Μῆδος παρέλαβε τὴν βασιλείαν. Ἐντεῦθεν σκοποῦμενοι, καὶ τὸ ἀψευδὲς τῶν προφητῶν ἐπιστάμενοι, εὐρίσκομεν τοῦτον Μῆδον μὲν ὄντα πατρώθεν, Χαλδαῖον δὲ ὄντα μητρόθεν, καὶ τοῦ Ναβουχοδονόσορ ἔκγονον. Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ἡμεῖς ἑκατέρας προφητείας τὸ ἀληθές ζητήσαντες ἠΰρομεν· ὡς δὲ φίλον ἑκάστῳ περὶ τούτου φρονεῖτω οὐδεμία γὰρ ἐκ τῆς περὶ τὸ γένος ἀμφιβολίας γενήσεται βλάβη. Φέρε τοίνυν, τῆς κατὰ μέρος ἐρμηνείας ἀψώμεθα.

son until the time of their own land comes.”¹³⁴ Since his son is called Belshazzar by Daniel, then, we must inquire as to the grandson. If, however, you object to this with the claim that Darius is called the Mede, be assured that this does not undermine the statement: Cyrus was the son of the daughter of Astyages, who was a Mede and reigned over Medes, but he is called a Persian: people like to assign nationality on the basis of paternal relationship. It was therefore likely also that Darius was the son of a Median father and a Chaldean mother, and was called after his father. But if this is not the case, let it be proved by those who want to that Nebuchadnezzar’s grandson inherited the ancestral kingdom, and we shall have no quarrel with that: everyone of good sense would admit that the great Jeremiah’s prophecy is utterly true.

If, on the other hand, your preference is that Darius is not the son of Nebuchadnezzar’s daughter but of his son in view of the prophet’s saying, “They will serve him, | his son and his son’s son,” gain a familiarity with the idiom of the divine Scripture, which is in the habit of developing a genealogy from the males, and prefers to speak of a grandson by referring to him as son of the son. The fact that he was not son of the son blessed Daniel confirms by saying, “Darius the Mede succeeded to the kingdom;” and the fact that Nebuchadnezzar passed the kingdom to his grandsons the divine Jeremiah foretold. So it is possible to find the truth on the basis of both inspired works, from Jeremiah the fact that Nebuchadnezzar’s grandson succeeded to the kingdom, and from blessed Daniel the fact that on the death of Belshazzar, Nebuchadnezzar’s son, as God decreed, Darius the Mede succeeded to the kingdom. In consideration of this fact, and knowing the reliability of the inspired authors, we find this man to be a Mede on his father’s side, a Chaldean on his mother’s side, and a grandson of Nebuchadnezzar. This we found, then, by looking for the truth in each of the inspired works; let each person take a position on it as appeals to them: no harm will flow from uncertainty about race.

¹³⁴ Jer 27:4–7. Theodoret might admit that Josephus, too (whom he may have accessed via Eusebius, Guinot believes [L’Exégèse, 748]), wishes to maintain the credibility of scriptural statement, suffering like him by taking it in literalistic fashion, as Jeremiah is being misapplied here. The decision to recognize Darius as a grandson of Nebuchadnezzar is an “educated guess” by one who has rated Evil-merodach and Belshazzar as his sons, now defunct.

So come now, let us begin a detailed commentary. After Darius came to the throne, the text says, he set over his kingdom 120 satraps to be stationed throughout his whole kingdom. Over them were three supervisors, Daniel one of them, and to these the satraps were to give a report so that the king might not meet with any trouble (vv. 1–2). Nothing, to be sure, can dull true religion: it spreads its rays everywhere, be it in slave or in captive; far from anything being capable of obscuring its splendor, it spreads its characteristic gleam. You can see this in many and varied places, but especially in the situations affecting blessed Daniel, who became slave and captive, inhabiting a foreign land, living among barbarians, and yet was illustrious; even under Nebuchadnezzar he was worshiped by the most fearsome king. He shone out also under Belshazzar, and was likewise conspicuous under Darius, succession in kings effecting no change in his esteem; rather, while they were snuffed out by death, he maintained equal prominence under them all. Normally, in fact, those entrusted with kingship or any other rule confide least in the people closest to their predecessors; but he enjoyed the same trust from all, receiving equal privileges and being entrusted with the same governance—hence, of course, his becoming one of the three supervisors under Darius. Now, by supervisors I think there is reference to what are now called viceroys,¹³⁵ and by satraps to the governors of the nations, Daniel being one of the supervisors. |

He excelled the supervisors and the satraps (v. 3), the governors of the nations, the terms being cited in parallel for comparison and contrast. He then gives the reason for his excellence: Because there was an extraordinary spirit in him, that is, he had received from God a greater and more abundant grace. Now, from this we learn that to those also who are entrusted with conduct of earthly affairs, even if unsympathetic to religion, a grace of wisdom is given from God for their management of those they rule. Blessed Daniel implied as much in saying, Because there was an extraordinary spirit in him, that is, he had received the grace in keeping with his religious sentiments.¹³⁶ Perceiving this, the king appointed him over the whole of his kingdom: realizing that the man was beloved by God and enjoyed influence from on high, he entrusted him with the management of his whole kingdom. The greatness of the honor, however, gave rise to envy: But the supervisors and the satraps studied how to find grounds against Daniel from the kingdom, or, as some of the manuscripts have it, “from outreaches of the kingdom”¹³⁷—that is, they left no stone unturned in their desire to find him infringing the laws of the kingdom, meaning, in their wish to incriminate him in what is now called treason.

¹³⁵ The term in his text is πατριάρχαι. Imperial organization in his time evidently reflected this structure, though history does not support its existence in Persian times.

¹³⁶ Comments like this by Theodoret are equivalent to his saying the work is autobiographical.

But they failed in their purpose: They found no grounds or any infringement or offense in him, because he was above reproach. Blessed Daniel had the benefit of this testimony, not only from those who loved him, but also from those who schemed against him; while maintaining his devotion to God, he acquired also great support where the kings were concerned. Despite hatching countless stratagems, they did not find him transgressing the laws of the kingdom. The supervisors said, We will not find any grounds against Daniel unless in connection with his own God’s laws (v. 5): knowing his religious scrupulosity, it was there they cast their wicked snares. The supervisors and the satraps together approached the king and said to him, King Darius, live forever! All the generals, local officials, governors, and satraps in your kingdom are at one in advising you to determine by royal decree and institute an ordinance that if anyone makes a request of any god or man for thirty days except of you, they will be thrown into the den of lions. So now, O King, make the ordinance and publish the text so that the decree of the Medes and Persians may not be altered and | no change be made to contradict it. 1401
At that point King Darius gave orders for the notice and the decision (vv. 6–9).

Nothing is more loathsome than envy: it pressured them into committing impiety, and caused an impious decree to be published forbidding those intent on offering prayers to God; they prevented not only themselves from doing it but also all others subject to royal control. And lest their malice be patent, they included the veto on anyone's asking or receiving anything even from a man inside thirty days, allowing only to the king a report of need in all those days. In surrendering their mind's eye to envy, they did not understand that the king could not supply everything to petitioners, like health, life, fathering children, abundance of rain, and anything else that we receive when we ask it of God. Losing their senses, however, they ascribed to the king what belongs to God, and persuaded the foolish king to reach the same verdict and ratify their impious request.

Blessed Daniel, however, gave no thought to these impious laws even for a moment. He went in to his house at once, with the windows on its upper floor open opposite Jerusalem to pray on his knees three times a day and make confession before God, just as he had done in the past (v. 10). Now, note how much this verse implied in a few words in mentioning the piety and courage of blessed Daniel. Firstly, when Daniel learned that the decision has been reached, he went into his house—that is, when he got news of the passing of the law, he had great scorn for it and continued openly doing the opposite. It next mentions a further detail which reveals his courage: the windows were open, it says—in other words, he said his prayers, not in secret, but openly, with everyone watching, not for vainglory but in scorn for the impiety of the law. A further detail is also given, indicating this courage of his, on its upper floor: he offered prayers to God, not on the ground floor but in a prominent place where he was obvious to everyone by being positioned on high and having the windows open. He prayed opposite Jerusalem, it says; he did this not only to provoke his accusers, but also to fulfill an ancient law: when Solomon built that famous temple and celebrated the festival of consecration, he prayed a prayer of supplication for divine grace and implored that the temple be filled with it, adding this in addition to other things, “If you surrender your people to their foes, and they take them as captives to a land distant or | near, and they have a change of heart in the land where they are transported, and pray to you in their exile in the words, We sinned, we did wrong, we broke the law, and they turn back to you with their whole heart and with their whole soul in the land of their foes where you transferred them, and they pray to you toward their land which you gave their ancestors, and the city which you chose, and the house which I built to your name, may you hear-

Εἶτα λέγουσι τῷ βασιλεῖ· «Γνωθι, βασιλεῦ, ὅτι τὸ δόγμα Μήδοις καὶ Πέρσαις, τοῦ πάντα ὀρισμὸν καὶ στάσιν, ἦν ἐὰν ὁ βασιλεὺς στήσῃ, οὐ δεῖ παραλλάξαι.» Οὐκ εἶ, φασί, κύριος, ἃ νενομοθέτηκας ἀνατρέψαι Μήδων γὰρ καὶ Περσῶν οἱ νόμοι παρακελεύονται, τοὺς τιθεμένους νόμους παρὰ πρῶτου πληροῦσθαι τοῦ βασιλέως. Βιασθεὶς δὲ ὁ βασιλεὺς τῷ τε δῆθεν εὐλόγῳ τῶν λόγων καὶ τῷ πλήθει τῶν κατηγορῶν, παραδίδωσι μὲν τοῖς λέουσι τὸν μακάριον Δανιήλ· ἐπεύχεται δὲ αὐτῷ σωτηρίαν λέγων· «Ὁ Θεὸς ὃ λατρεύεις ἐνδελεχῶς, αὐτὸς ἐξελεῖταί σε.» Εὐσεβὲς τὸ ῥῆμα, καὶ τοῖς πρῶτοις ἀσύμφωνον. Εἰ γὰρ τοσαύτην τῷ Θεῷ προσμαρτυρεῖς δύναμιν, πῶς ἐνομοθέτησας μηδένα τούτῳ εἰς τριάκοντα ἡμέρας προσεύξασθαι; Ἄλλ' ἔοικεν ὁ Δαρεῖος χρηστὸς μὲν γεγενῆσθαι, καὶ τὸν τρόπον ἐπεικλῆς, their sins by which they have sinned against you and all the transgressions they have committed against you, and show them pity before their captors.”¹³⁸ Instructed in this, Daniel faced Jerusalem in praying, and not just once a day: he continued doing it even three times. His posture also shows his contrite heart: he continued to offer his confession to God on bended knee.¹³⁹

While this was going on, those who had become receptacles of envy indicted Daniel for lawless behavior, read out the law that had been passed, denounced Daniel and accused him of breaking it. The king was sorry to hear of the indictment, turned advocate instead of judge, and tried to prove Daniel innocent, the text suggesting as much by saying, At that point the king, on hearing the report, was very sorry for him, and on Daniel's behalf went to pains to save him (v. 14). But those malicious men were bent on evil and divined the king's purpose (suggested by the clause They prevailed upon the king, that is, They realized he was on Daniel's side). Then they said to the king, Be aware, O King, that it is the ruling of the Medes and Persians that whatever ordinance and decree the king makes cannot be altered (v. 15): you do not have the authority to overturn what you have prescribed, the laws of Medes and Persians ordering that the laws passed by the previous king be fulfilled.

Under pressure both from the compelling logic of the words and from the number of the accusers, the king surrendered blessed Daniel to the lions, on the one hand, and on the other he prayed for his salvation in the words, The God whom you serve with constancy will rescue you. A pious remark, though inconsistent with the preceding: if you lend confirmation to God's having such great power, how is it you legislated that no one pray to him for thirty days? Darius, however, gave the impression of being kindly, simple in manner, rather inclined to piety, yet timid and very easily deceived, not so much administering the kingdom as being led by his subjects instead of leading them. He also seems a great admirer of Daniel, saying, God, | whom you serve constantly, on whose account you even scorn my laws and to whom you unceasingly offer worship, will reward you for your piety and free you from the pressing troubles. Then, with confidence in God's power and suspecting the schemes of the accusers, he shut the opening of the den with a stone and placed a seal on it with his signet ring to prevent any mischief on the part of those of Daniel's company, trusting that God would not allow the lions to harm the sacred and holy body of Daniel. 1405

Having done this, then, The king went off to his house; he went to bed without dining, they brought him no food, and sleep deserted him (v. 18). Each of these details testifies both to his humanity and to his cowardice: a mark of his humanity was his refusing to partake of food or let his eyes rest in sleep, instead staying awake in grief for the unjust punishment of Daniel; it was a mark of cowardice that he was not so affected as to gainsay the accusers and invoke his royal authority and power to save the wronged. After passing the night in this way, King Darius rose early at daybreak (v. 19), that is, while it was still dark, around dawn, so that there was even need of lamps (the meaning of at daybreak). He went in haste to the lions' den. On approaching the den—that is, while he still not there—he cried out to Daniel in a loud voice (vv. 19–20).¹⁴⁰ While not yet at the actual den, he was forced by the ardor of his disposition to cry out and call on Daniel, and enquire if by relying on divine grace he proved superior to the lions' ferocity. Daniel, servant of the living God, was your God whom you serve with constancy able to rescue you from the lions' mouth? Each of these phrases shows the religious spirit of the king, who complimented Daniel on his piety: firstly, he calls him not his own servant but God's; next, he calls Daniel's God living; then, in praise of his piety, whom you serve with constancy, that is, you were not prevented from worship under pressure of the law. The question Was he able to rescue you from the lions' mouth? means, Was it his will to render you proof against the lions? After all, he would not have referred to God as powerless after calling him living.

On hearing this, Daniel replied, O King, live forever! (v. 21). He prefixes | the customary salutation to his own words, meaning, 1408 May it be your good fortune to live long; even at present, as we remarked before, remember, some people are in the habit of calling kings eternal in commercial documents. My God sent his angel and shut the lions' mouth, and they did me no harm, because before him I was found upright and righteous, and in your presence, O King, no fault was found in me (v. 22): righteous as he is and governing all things righteously, God perceived that I put his worship ahead of the impious laws and never committed any offence against your kingship; so he made me proof against harm from the lions, and showed them to be images of lions rather than lions.

At this the king was very glad for him, and he gave orders to bring Daniel up from the den (v. 23): he was overjoyed and full of satisfaction in coming to know God's power, and learning of the safety of his loved one, and he immediately ordered him to be brought up from the den. Then, on seeing him safe and sound, and showing no ill effects of his encounter with the lions, he ordered Daniel's accusers to be thrown to the lions along with their children and wives. They did not get as far as the bottom before the lions overpowered them and crushed all their bones to pieces (v. 24). This was, in fact, an effect of divine righteousness and wisdom: to prevent their claiming that the lions shunned Daniel on account of overfeeding and satiety, and thus through envy belittling the miracle that occurred, they were tossed in and confirmed the lions' ferocity; the lions fell upon them when they thrown in, and made food of them as they fell before they had hit the ground by snatching them in midair.¹⁴¹ In paying due penalty, therefore, they proclaim God's righteousness, while in thus being consumed in a trice by the wild beasts they give a glimpse of God's wisdom and teach everyone that it was not the lions' satiety but Daniel's desire for God that rendered him proof against harm from the lions.

¹⁴¹ Unlike the incident of the three (young) men's survival and hymn-singing amidst the flames in chapter 3, on which Theodoret moralized as the story-teller hoped, in this case of Daniel's survival among the lions, which also figures in early Christian thought (cf. Heb 11:33) and iconography as a symbol of the resurrection of the body, he remarks briefly only on its miraculous character (fortunately not caviling at the number of victims for the lions, there being 125 guilty officials plus family members!). For him, as he says in closing the chapter and his fifth tome, Daniel is a martyr to fidelity to the true religion (though this

On perceiving this, King Darius wrote to all the peoples, tribes, language groups, inhabitants in all the land (v. 25): considering it unbecoming to conceal such marvelous wonder-working, and not make everyone acquainted with the true religion, he therefore writes in these terms: May peace be multiplied for you, that is, May it be your good fortune to enjoy peace forever. This resembles the greeting used by us: in our letter writing we are in the habit of beginning, "Greetings in the Lord." | Then he gives a useful and beneficial account. From my presence a decree has gone out in all my royal command for everyone to be in fear and trembling before the God of Daniel (v. 26): I want everyone living under my authority to worship the God of Daniel, not idly and casually, but to offer him worship in fear and trembling. He also gives the reason, Because he is the living God, abiding forever: he is sufficient of himself, undergoing no change, always the same, continuing forever. To this he adds, His kingdom will never be destroyed, and his lordship is forever. He defends and rescues (vv. 26–27): he abides forever, he has an indestructible kingdom and a lordship without end that rescues and redeems those who believe in him. He works signs in heaven and on earth: it is possible to see his wonder-working, both that which happens in heaven and that on earth, through which he brings out his power. Even in the present case he has given us a glimpse of it: He rescued Daniel from the mouth of the lions, and rendered him proof against the appetites of wild beasts whetted by hunger and rage. While the letter conveyed this to the world, then, the conclusion of the story tells that Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius and in the reign of Cyrus the Persian (v. 28),¹⁴² that is, he continued to be conspicuous and illustrious in everything in each reign.

It behooves us for our part, being acquainted with the power of true religion, to opt for it, prefer it to anything else, and give ground before no threat. Instead, even should everyone at the one time bring forces to bear on us on its account, we should vigorously withstand the attack by relying on its might. This was the thought does not lead him to see Antiochus IV in focus).

¹⁴² This is the reference, of course, which proves a problem for both Josephus and Theodoret in trying to identify "Darius the Mede."

way, in fact, that the band of the blessed apostles, under siege by the whole world, you might say, remained invincible, and made subjects of the enemy. This was the way blessed Daniel, in the face of the schemes of so many satraps and supervisors, emerged superior to the enemy; and at the moment the adversaries appeared to have prevailed, then it was they suffered overthrow. With these examples, therefore, let us keep a sincere disposition toward God so as to enjoy grace from him constantly. May it be the good fortune of us all to attain it, thanks to the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit be glory, for ages of ages. Amen. |

CHAPTER 7

In the first year of Belshazzar king of the Chaldeans, Daniel had a dream, and there was a vision in his head in bed. He wrote down the dream (v. 1). Up to these words blessed Daniel composed the prophecy with more accent on factual details. First, remember, at the very beginning he conveyed what happened to the actual captives, and he went on to mention the great degree of care they enjoyed from the God of all. Then he recounted the heavy penalty Nebuchadnezzar paid for his cruelty and arrogance, and later the kind of retribution Belshazzar suffered for showing disrespect for the sacred vessels. When he was destroyed by divine intervention, and the kingdom was transferred to the Medes, he recorded his fate and that of Darius, informing us how the latter felt about him and the kinds of schemes he suffered at the hands of the generals and satraps, but received divine support.

Having recounted those things as a historian, as it were, he now begins to convey the predictions he learned about through the revelations.¹⁴³ Firstly, he cites the revelation of the four wild beasts, very similar to the dream of Nebuchadnezzar: he saw in one image four materials, and this man sees four beasts coming up from the sea. Lest we are forced to tell the same things twice, however, let us begin the commentary in detail, this being the way for

Καὶ τέσσαρα θηρία μεγάλη ἀνέβαινον ἐκ τῆς θαλάσσης, 1413 διαφέροντα ἀλλήλων.» Ὁ μὲν οὖν Ναβουχοδονόσορ εἰκόνα βλέπει, διδασκόμενος τῶν παρόντων πραγμάτων τὸ μάταιον, καὶ ὅτι σχήματα μᾶλλον εἰσιν, ἢ φησιν ὁ θεὸς Ἀπόστολος, ἀλλ' οὐ πράγματα· οὐδὲν γὰρ αὐτῶν μόνιμον, οὐδὲ βέβαιον, ἀλλὰ πάντα διαρρεῖ καὶ φθείρεται καὶ μαραινεται· ὁ δὲ μακάριος Δανιήλ θάλασσαν βλέπει, τοῦ παρόντος βίου τὰ κύματα διδασκόμενος. Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ τὴν ξένην ἰδεῖν ἠναγκάζετο δορυάλωτος γενόμενος, ἀναγκαίως τοῦ βίου τὸν κλύδωνα καὶ χειμῶνα διδάσκεται. Καὶ ὁ μὲν βασιλεὺς, ὡς μέγα φρονῶν «ἐπὶ χρυσῷ καὶ ἀργύρῳ, καὶ χαλκῷ, καὶ σιδήρῳ,» διὰ τούτων λαμβάνει τὰ τῶν βασιλειῶν αἰνίγματα, καὶ τὰς τῶν βασιλέων μανθάνει διαδοχάς, καὶ διδάσκεται μὴ μεγάλα φρονεῖν ἐπὶ τῇ βασιλείᾳ ὀξύρροπον ἐχούσῃ μεταβολήν. Ὁ δὲ προφήτης, ἅτε δὴ τῶν ὑλῶν ἐκείνων καταφρονῶν, «τέσσαρα θηρία» βλέπει, διδασκόμενος, ὡς αἱ φοβεραὶ αὐταὶ βασιλεῖαι, αἱ πάντας ἀνθρώπους δεδιττόμεναι, τέλος λήψονται καὶ αὐταί, μία δὲ μόνη ἡ ἀτελεύτητος μένει βασιλεία, ἣν τοῖς ἁγίοις ὑπρέπισεν ὁ τῶν ἁγίων Θεός. Θάλατταν τοίνυν καλεῖ τὸν βίον, ἅτε δὴ μυρίας ἔχοντα τρικυμίας, ἀνέμους δὲ ταύτῃ προσβάλλοντας, τὰς τῶν πραγμάτων μεταβολάς. Καθάπερ γὰρ νότου μὲν πνέοντος ἐπὶ τὸ ἀρκτῶν μέρος διατρέχει τὰ κύματα, βορέου δὲ κινοῦντος τὴν θάλασσαν, πάλιν τὸ ῥόθιον ἐπὶ τὸ νότιον μέρος ὠθεῖται· οὕτως, ἡνίκα μὲν Ἀσσύριοι κατεῖχον τῆς οἰκουμένης τοὺς οἴακας, πρὸς ἑαυτοὺς ἅπαντας εἶλκον

it to be brought out more clearly.¹⁴⁴ In the first year of Belshazzar king of the Chaldeans, Daniel had a dream, and there was a vision in his head in bed, that is, he had this revelation while asleep: since he would record also what he saw during the day, he was right to inform us what he saw in a dream and what while awake. He wrote down the dream: he could not bring himself to conceal what had been revealed to him from God, instead recording it for the benefit of everyone.¹⁴⁵ The beginning of his words. In reply he said, that is, he began his account thus.

I, Daniel, saw in my vision at night the four winds of heaven falling upon the great sea. Four large beasts came up out of the sea, different from one another (vv. 2–3). For his part Nebuchadnezzar | gazed upon an image, drawing a lesson in the futility of things 1413 of this life and the fact that they are rather appearances, as the divine apostle says, not realities, there being nothing lasting or stable in them, everything fluid and failing and fading.¹⁴⁶ Daniel, on the other hand, is gazing at a sea, gaining a lesson in the billows of the present life: since he was a captive and obliged to see a foreign land, he was inevitably schooled in life's storm and tempest. For his part the king, taking pride in gold, silver, bronze, and iron, found in them figures of the kingdoms, learning of the succession of kings, and being taught not to boast of kingship that is subject to rapid change. The prophet, on the other hand, full of scorn for those materials, is gazing at four beasts and learning that these fearsome kingdoms, which instill terror in all people, will themselves also come to an end, whereas one single kingdom abides without end, which the God of the holy ones prepared for the holy ones.

So by sea he refers to life in its having many tidal waves and winds buffeting it, the changes in circumstance: just as the waves beat toward the north when the south wind blows, whereas the breakers are driven toward the south when the north wind stirs up the sea, so when the Assyrians held the world's tiller, they drew ¹⁴⁴ Clarity and lack of repetition continue to be the virtues to which he aspires.

¹⁴⁵ Thus closes v. 1 in Theodotion's text and modern versions such as the NRSV. The Aramaic, however, proceeds to add two further introductory phrases, possibly later insertions, and these appear in Theodoret's text.

¹⁴⁶ Cf. 1 Cor 7:31. Though Theodoret has noted the change in genre (if not identifying it accurately) after chapter 6, he still sees Daniel as composer of a single continuous work, the visions in both parts being comparable.

all the subject peoples to themselves. With the change in imperial power to the Persians, immediately the course of the subject peoples was also in their direction, and in turn when the Macedonians took the scepter, they all ignored those to whom they were previously subject and to whom they paid the customary tribute. But when Romans got control of everyone, they all betook themselves to the west, setting no store by Macedonians, who were themselves numbered among the subject peoples.¹⁴⁷ He was right, therefore, to compare the changes in circumstance to winds, which drive the waves of the sea in one direction at one time, and in another at another time. This is also the reason he mentioned four winds, since there were four changes in kingdoms as well. He informs us also of how the beasts differed from one another.

The first was like a lioness, and its wings were like those of an eagle. I kept watching until its wings were plucked off; it was lifted up from the earth, it was made to stand on the feet of a human being, and it was given a human heart (v. 4). By the lioness he hinted at the empire of the Assyrians, or Chaldeans, this being the first to gain control of the greater part of the world; it was a royal animal, and he says its wings resembled those of an eagle, this animal ruling all the birds. So just as | Nebuchadnezzar also said he had a vision of that image's golden head, and the most divine Daniel in interpreting it said, "The head of gold is you, O King,"¹⁴⁸ likewise here too he cited the strongest of the wild animals in reference to the first kingdom, not to confirm its greater strength, but to indicate its pride of place. Still, he observed that its wings were plucked off, that is, it was deprived of all its subjects and stripped of its former power. It was lifted up from the earth, that is, its reign ceased. It was made to stand on the feet of a human being: it was put on a level with its subjects. It was given a human heart: it learned by ¹⁴⁷ As in his interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream in chapter 2, Theodoret with his contemporaries takes the four empires to be the Babylonian ("Assyrian"), Medo-Persian, Greco-Seleucid ("Macedonian"), and Roman for what the author intended to be Babylonians, Medes, Persians, and Greeks. Here he has the additional encouragement of Rev 13:1-2, which uses the imagery of this chapter of the Roman Empire. What he is not tapping into is the imagery of the primeval watery abyss (and sea monsters) occurring in the Old Testament in Gen 1-2, Job, the Psalms, and Isaiah, not to mention ancient Eastern mythology generally.

Διὰ τοῦτο, φησί, καὶ ἔλεγον αὐτῇ· «Ἀνάστα, φάγε σάρκας πολλὰς.» οὐκ ἐπιτρέποντες τοῦτο ποιεῖν, ἀλλὰ προλέγοντες τὰ ἐσόμενα, καὶ τὸ ὠμὸν καὶ ἀνήμερον προσμαρτυροῦντες. «Τρία δέ, φησί, πτερὰ ἐν τῷ στόματι αὐτῆς.» Τῶν τριῶν γὰρ τῆς οἰκουμένης τμημάτων ἐκράτησε, τοῦ ἐσίου, καὶ τοῦ βορείου, καὶ τοῦ νοτίου. Κῦρος μὲν γὰρ, ὁ πρῶτος Περσῶν βασιλεύσας, τὸ Ἑῶν ἅπαν μέχρι τοῦ Ἑλλησπόντου ὕφ' ἑαυτὸν ἐποιήσατο· Καμβύσης δὲ ὁ τούτου παῖς καὶ τὴν Αἴγυπτον ἐχειρώσατο, καὶ Αἰθίοπας ὑπηκόους ἀπέφηνε· Δαρεῖος δὲ ὁ τοῦ Ὑστάσπου, Σκυθῶν τῶν Νομάδων ἐκράτησεν, οἱ τὸ βόρειον ἔλαχον μέρος τῆς οἰκουμένης οἰκεῖν. Ξέρξης δὲ ὁ Δαρείου ἐπεχείρησε μὲν καὶ τὴν Εὐρώπην τοῖς ὑπηκόοις συνάψαι· ναυμαχίᾳ δὲ ἡττηθεὶς Ἀθηναίων, αἰσχρῶς ἀνέστρεψε, καὶ τὴν ἀπὸ τῆς ἀπληστίας τικτομένην ἔμαθε experience to adopt human ways of thinking, and in the imaginings of its mind not to surpass the limits of nature; since at the time they held the reins of the empire they suffered from conceit and unbridled arrogance, and hence blessed Isaiah said, “God will punish the ruler of the Assyrians for his self-importance.”¹⁴⁹ It was right that they should learn by experience the mutability of circumstances and the impermanence of prosperity, adopt human ways of thinking, know their own limitations, and acquire a human heart. This, then, is the account he gave of the first beast.¹⁵⁰

He goes on, Lo, another beast, like a bear, raised up on one part, three wings in its mouth amidst its teeth; they said this to it, Rise up, eat much flesh (v. 5). Here he is referring to the Persian Empire, saying it was like a bear on account of the cruelty and harshness of its punishments. The Persians, in fact, were more cruel than anyone else in punishing, employing cudgels, devising protracted torture with the cutting of parts of limbs, and inflicting an excruciating death on the victims—hence their saying to it, Rise up, eat much flesh, not to urge it to do so, but foretelling future events and testifying to its cruelty and ferocity. Three wings in its mouth: it ruled three quarters of the world, east, north and south, Cyrus, the first to rule Persia, bringing under him all the east as far as the Hellespont, Cambyses his son seizing Egypt and bringing the Ethiopians into subjection, and Darius the son of Hystaspes in control of the nomadic Scythians, who were allotted the northern part of the world.¹⁵¹ Xerxes son of Darius tried to link Europe with his subjects, but he was defeated in a naval battle with the Athenians, retreated in shame, and learned the harm that ensues

¹⁵⁰ The précis of vv. 4–5 given in Rev 13 suggests to some commentators that they originally read to give the lion the three tusks (“wings”—the only three Babylonian kings whom the Bible and Theodoret know), with its wings plucked (when “Darius the Mede” captured Babylon). The bear is that “Darius,” its lifted paw (“part”) suggesting not ferocity but the humane characteristics of the Medes—hence human stance and heart. Obviously, the text in its present condition does not offer a compelling interpretation; and Theodoret’s gives the impression of conjecture, like that of his modern counterparts.

from greed. Hence his saying, three wings in its mouth, | though 1417 some of the manuscripts have “sides,” which makes no difference:
whether it is one or the other, it conveys the fact that it exploited three parts of the world and received tribute from all quarters.¹⁵²

He did well to add in its mouth to highlight the contribution being made by everyone. And since the kingdom was not completely destroyed, instead continuing with part of its former influence, he did not say it suffered what the former one suffered in being deprived of its wings, being made to stand on the feet of a human being and receiving a human heart. Instead, he said it rose up on one side: it was raised up on one part, that is, in being in control of three sections of the world, it was deprived of the majority but held power over one part. In other words, while formerly in control of the whole of Asia and Libya, it was deprived of Egypt and Ethiopia; it no longer controls Palestine, Phoenicia, and Syria, and it has also lost control of Asia, and Pontus Euxine is beyond its sway. It rules only Persia, Media, and Assyria, and a few neighboring nations. Hence he says, It was raised up on one part.¹⁵³

After this description of the second beast, he goes on, In the wake of this I saw another beast like a leopard, with four wings of a bird on its back; the beast had four heads, and authority was given it
(v. 6). In this he is hinting at the Macedonian kingdom: it was very appropriate for him to compare Alexander to a leopard on account of its speed and rapidity and diverse colors. He said the beast had four wings of a bird because like a bird Alexander traversed the four quarters of the world and brought all under his control; and by four heads he referred to the division of command, four kings taking the place of one: Ptolemy son of Lagus was entrusted with the helm of Egyptian affairs, to Seleucus was given government of matters in the east, Antigonos had control of Asia, Antiponos Macedonia in the view of some commentators, but according to others Antipater, and still others Philip, also called Arrhideus, Alexander’s own brother.¹⁵⁴ While the four heads refer to the four ¹⁵² At least Theodoret looks for guidance in this obscure description to other forms of the text, ἀντέγραφα, before cutting the Gordian knot. There is no value for his readers in his being tentative.

¹⁵³ Theodoret the political-geographer sketches the limits of the Persian Empire in his time.

¹⁵⁴ With equal relish in backgrounding the text for his readers, and after some research into his predecessors’ views, Theodoret sketches out the divisions governments after Alexander, then, and the four wings the actual empire of Alexander that prevailed over the four quarters of the world, he said authority was given to the beast, since he proved to be in control of what his predecessors did not. Nevertheless, even the kingdom dominating everything came to an end.

In the wake of it I saw in a dream by night a fourth beast, | 1420
fearsome and extremely terrifying; its huge teeth of iron and its claws of bronze kept eating and crushing and trampling on the remains with its feet, and it easily destroyed all the beasts before it (v. 7). By the fourth beast he refers to the Roman Empire, but does not give it a name because the city of the Romans was composed of many nations and ruled the whole world. It was first under kings, then at one time the people, and at another the aristocracy, but later it reverted to being a kingdom as before. He calls the beast fearsome and extremely terrifying since this empire proved more powerful than all the other empires. In the image he described the fourth material as iron, adding that just as iron crushes and dominates everything, so it will crush and dominate everything, whereas in this text he says the beast's teeth were of iron; so it is clear that here he also refers to the same empire. It kept eating and smashing: the taxes imposed by the Romans on their subjects were actually heavier. Also, it kept trampling on the remains with its feet. By feet he refers to the empire's army, by which not insignificant losses were sustained by the inhabitants of the cities and territories. It easily destroyed all the beasts before it: the Roman Empire proved more powerful and notorious than the empires before it.

It had ten horns, the text says, indicating here that about the end of the empire ten kings will arise at the one time, some of whom will be strong, others very weak. This, in fact, he conveyed also in the dream of the image: there too "the ten toes on its feet were partly iron, partly clay," which blessed Daniel interpreted to mean, "Part of the kingdom will be strong and part weak."¹⁵⁵ Hence it is clear that both dreams indicate the same thing. And it had ten horns. I was pondering its ten horns, when lo and behold another horn appeared, small but conspicuous, rising up in the middle of

of Alexander's empire (the alternative nomination of Philip is found in Eusebius and Jerome). Modern commentators, on the other hand, see the Persian Empire in focus, the four heads being the four of its kings mentioned in the Bible: Cyrus, Xerxes, Artaxerxes, and "Darius the Persian" (Neh 12:22).

Λέγει δὲ ὅτι καὶ τρία κέρατα ἐξερρίζωσε τῶν ἔμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ· αἰνίττεται δὲ ὅτι τρεῖς βασιλεῖς καταλύσει ἀπὸ τῶν δέκα κατὰ ταὐτὸν βασιλευόντων. Μικρὸν δὲ αὐτὸ κέρας καλεῖ, ὡς ἀπὸ μικρᾶς φυλῆς τῶν Ἰουδαίων 1421 φύρομενον· θεωρητὸν δέ, ὡς ἐπίσημον μετὰ ταῦτα γινόμενον. them, and three of its former ones were uprooted to make room for it. There were eyes on this horn like human eyes, and a mouth speaking lofty words, and it made war on the holy ones (vv. 7–8). Here there is reference to the antichrist appearing between the ten horns, the meaning being that he uprooted three horns to make room for it, and the reference being to the three kings he will destroy of the ten ruling at the one time. Now, he calls the horn itself little as springing up from the little tribe of the Jews, and conspicuous as becoming famous afterwards; by | the eyes he suggested the cleverness and trickery he employed in trampling many underfoot. 1421 He also says a mouth speaking lofty words, that is, arrogant and haughty; blessed Paul gives a wise lesson in this in saying, “Let no one deceive you in any way, because unless the rebellion comes first, and the sinful one¹⁵⁶ is revealed, the child of ruin, the adversary who is lifted up over every so-called god or object of worship so as to enter and take a seat in God’s temple, presenting himself as God.”¹⁵⁷ Hinting at this, blessed Daniel also said, a mouth speaking lofty words, and it made war on the holy ones: it tries every stratagem in its desire to make all human beings sharers in wickedness and retribution.

In doing this, however, he says, he will not last long but will be destroyed as quickly as possible. I kept looking until thrones were set in place, and an Ancient of Days took his seat, his clothing as white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool. His throne was fiery flame, and its wheels burning fire. A river of fire issued forth and flowed before him, a thousand thousands served him, and ten thousand times ten thousand attended on him. The court sat, and books were opened (vv. 9–10). It was the horn speaking lofty words, arrogant and haughty, that perpetrated all those things, even making war on the holy ones until the court sat. Now, we should realize that God is incorporeal, simple and without form, uncircumscribed; yet while being uncircumscribed in nature, he often takes visible forms for people's benefit. It is possible to see him making himself visible in one way to Abraham, in another to Moses, yet another to Isaiah, and likewise in a different form to Ezekiel. So when you see the difference in the revelations, instead of thinking the divinity has many forms, listen to him speaking through the prophet Hosea, "I multiplied visions, and adopted likenesses in the works of the inspired authors."¹⁵⁸ He said, I adopted likenesses, not I appeared: he presents himself under the forms he wishes. Likewise, of course, blessed Ezekiel had a vision of someone composed of amber and fire, and after describing the revelation he added, "It was a likeness of the glory of the Lord:"¹⁵⁹ he did not say he saw the Lord, or the Lord's glory itself—only the likeness of the Lord's glory.

And here blessed Daniel, therefore, in the phrase Ancient of Days conveys the eternal; some of the commentators, in fact, took it likewise | and rendered it "The one who makes days old."¹⁶⁰ He sees also the purity of the hair and the splendor of the clothing, and is instructed to recognize the complete innocence and holiness, not only of the divine nature but also of what it betokens, namely, righteousness, providence, care, judgment. That is to say, since he had seen the horn using arrogant words and hatching countless schemes against God's servants, he is taught through the purity beaming from all sides that far from God overlooking his committing these crimes, he is permitting them in his ineffable providence. And in case you should get the idea that God in his goodness wishes to assist his holy ones but is unable to do so, he sees also that the throne was made of flame, the wheels likewise having the nature of fire, a river of fire issuing from the throne, a thousand thousands serving, and ten thousand times ten thousand in attendance. Through the latter he conveys God's power, and through the former his freedom from blemish or fault, while through the antiquity his being eternal, wise, and gentle. From here he proceeded, The court sat, and books were opened, that is, he decided it was time for judgment, and opened the record of each person's doings (by books referring to records). If, on the other hand, you think there is reference to the Lord's promise to the apostles, "Twelve thrones will be placed, and you will take your seat and judge the twelve tribes of Israel,"¹⁶¹ it would not be out of place, the promise of the reality being reliable.

Καὶ αὐτῷ ἐδόθη ἡ τιμή, καὶ ἡ ἀρχή καὶ ἡ βασιλεία· καὶ πάντες οἱ λαοί, φυλαί, γλῶσσαι, αὐτῷ δουλεύουσιν· καὶ ἡ ἐξουσία αὐτοῦ ἐξουσία αἰώνιος, ἥτις

At that stage I continued to look as a result of the lofty words which that horn was uttering. I kept watching until the beast was done away with and destroyed, and its body given over to be burned by fire (v. 11): on account of the frenzy of that horn, when the court was held, the fourth empire also was destroyed, and its body given over to be burned by fire. Now, it should be noted that it is not simply the beast that was given over to burning by fire, but its body: since by the beast he referred to the whole empire, and in the empire some people were attached to the true religion while others were evildoers, and with the prompting of the divine Scripture we normally call the former spiritual and the latter physical,¹⁶² he was right not to say the beast was given over to burning by fire, but the beast's body, that is, the more material, fleshly part, uninterested in spiritual things. *And the rule of the remaining beasts was changed, and length*¹⁶³ of life was given to them for | one moment and another (v. 12): the rule of the other beasts was already to an end, even if they used up a span of many years in exercising control, a definite time being assigned to each for reigning.

When all this had happened, the other empires already having previously come to an end, and those in the fourth empire having been consigned to the fire as deserving retribution, I saw in a vision of the night one like a Son of Man coming with the clouds of heaven. He proceeded to the Ancient of Days, and was presented to him. He was given honor and rule and kingship, and all peoples, tribes, and language groups will serve him; his authority is an eternal au-

¹⁶¹ Matt 19:28 loosely cited. Theodoret is by now presuming, as do modern commentators, that we have moved from prophecy of earthly empires to a celestial last judgment—the reality, ἀλήθεια, as he says of it.

¹⁶³ Reading μακρότης, "length," rather than Migne's μακαριότης ("beatitude").

οὐ παρελεύσεται, καὶ ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ οὐ διαφθαρήσεται.» Ἀληθῶς εἰς καιρὸν εἶποι τις ἂν πρὸς Ἰουδαίους, ἀ πάλαι πρὸς αὐτοὺς ὁ προφῆτης ἔλεγεν· «Ὁψις πόρνης ἐγένετό σοι, ἀπηναισχύνησας πρὸς πάντας.» Τί γὰρ τούτων σαφέστερον τῶν λόγων; εὐαγγελικῶς γὰρ τῷ ὄντι μᾶλλον καὶ ἀποστολικῶς, ἢ προφητικῶς καὶ αἰνιγματωδῶς, ταῦτα ὁ Προφῆτης ἐκήρυξεν. Ὅπερ γὰρ ὁ Κύριος ἐν τοῖς Εὐαγγελίοις λέγει. «Ὁψεσθε τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐρχόμενον ἐπὶ τῶν νεφελῶν τοῦ οὐρανοῦ μετὰ τῶν ἀγγέλων αὐτοῦ.» καὶ ὁ μακάριος Παῦλος· «Ὅτι ὁ Κύριος ἐν κελεύσματι, ἐν φωνῇ ἀρχαγγέλου, καὶ ἐν σάλπιγγι Θεοῦ καταβήσεται ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ, καὶ οἱ νεκροὶ ἐγερθήσονται ἄφθαρτοι, καὶ ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες οἱ παραλειπόμενοι ἀρπαγησόμεθα ἐν νεφέλαις εἰς ἀπάντησιν τοῦ Κυρίου εἰς ἅερα, καὶ οὕτω πάντοτε σὺν Κυρίῳ ἐσόμεθα.» τοῦτο σαφῶς ἡμᾶς ἐδίδαξεν ὁ μακάριος Δανιήλ, τὴν δευτέραν Σωτῆρος ἐπιφάνειαν προθεσπίζων, Υἱὸν μὲν ἀνθρώπου σαφῶς ἀποκαλῶν, δι' ἣν ἀνέλαβε φύσιν· ἐρχόμενον δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν νεφελῶν, κατὰ τὴν οἰκείαν ὑπόσχεσιν, ἵνα δείξῃ τὴν ἐξουσίαν· λαμβάνοντα δὲ τὴν τιμὴν, καὶ τὴν ἀρχήν, καὶ τὴν βασιλείαν παρὰ τοῦ Παλαιοῦ τῶν ἡμερῶν, ὡς ἄνθρωπον. Τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ ἐν τῷ δευτέρῳ ψαλμῷ ἐκ προσώπου αὐτοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ὁ μακάριος λέγει Δαβίδ· «Κύριος εἶπε πρὸς με· Υἱός μου εἶ σύ, ἐγὼ σήμερον γεγέννηκά σε· αἵτησαι παρ' ἐμοῦ, καὶ δώσω σοι ἔθνη τὴν κληρονομίαν σου, καὶ τὴν κατὰσχεσίν σου τὰ πέρατα τῆς γῆς.» Τοῦτο δὲ καὶ ὁ μακάριος λέγει Δανιήλ· «Πάντες γὰρ, φησί, λαοί, φυλαί, γλῶσσαι αὐτῷ δουλεύσουσι.» Καὶ δεικνὺς τὸ ἀτελεύτητον τῆς βασιλείας, «Ἡ ἐξουσία αὐτοῦ, φησίν, ἐξουσία αἰώνιος, ἥτις οὐ παρελεύσεται, καὶ ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ οὐ διαφθαρήσεται.» Οὕτως thority that will not pass away, and his kingship will not be destroyed (vv. 13–14). To be sure, it would be opportune for one to say to Jews what the prophet said to them of old, “You have the face of a whore, you have no shame in the presence of anyone.”¹⁶⁴ I mean, what could be clearer than these words? The prophet made this proclamation really more in the manner of the Gospels and epistles than obscurely in the manner of Old Testament writings; as the Lord says in the Gospels, “You will see the Son of Man coming on the clouds of heaven with his angels,”¹⁶⁵ and blessed Paul, “Because the Lord with a word of command, with the cry of an archangel, and with God’s trumpet will descend from heaven, and the dead will be raised imperishable, and we the living who are left will be caught up in the clouds to a meeting with the Lord in the air, and thus we shall always be with the Lord.”¹⁶⁶ This is what blessed Daniel clearly taught us, prophesying the second coming of the Savior, clearly calling him Son of Man on account of the nature he had assumed, coming on the clouds in keeping with his own promise to bring out his authority, and receiving as man honor and rule and kingship from the Ancient of Days. This, in fact, blessed David in the second psalm also says on the part of the Lord himself, “The Lord said to me, You are my son, today I have begotten you; ask it of me and I shall give you nations for your inheritance, and the ends of the earth as your possession.”¹⁶⁷ This, too, blessed Daniel says, All peoples, tribes, language groups will serve him; and to bring out the unending character of the kingdom, his authority an eternal authority that will not pass away, and his kingship will not be destroyed.

¹⁶⁵ Matt 24:30.

Having thus recorded the revelation, then, he went on, My spirit was terrified, I Daniel, in | my state of mind, and the visions in my head disturbed me (v. 15): the sight was terrifying, and my ignorance of the riddles confused my mind and filled it with alarm. So I approached one of the attendants and enquired of him clarification of all these things (v. 16). By attendants he refers to the thousand thousands and ten thousand times ten thousand, by which he did not mean a definite number but suggested a crowd beyond counting of those serving and attending: those of higher rank not only stood but also were also bidden to serve, while the rest betrayed their subjection by standing in fear. Just as in the case of human courts some of the defendants stand about betraying the fearsome character of the proceedings, while others go in and out bringing responses to the judge, so in the most fearsome court Daniel saw the ten thousands of attendants, and the thousand thousands entrusted with service.

Having made his entrance, then, and asked what was the interpretation of the revelation, he learned the truth from one of the attendants. He said to me, As for these four huge beasts, four empires will arise on earth, but will be removed. Holy ones of the Most High will receive possession of the kingdom and possess it for an age and for an age of ages (vv. 17–18). We should take careful note that he mentioned four empires here and four in the case of the image, and we should not think the clay one was a different empire from the iron one; there he said the end of the iron empire would be weaker, and here likewise he said three horns were rooted up from the ten, obviously being weaker in placement. These empires will be destroyed, then, he is saying, and the true and unending kingdom will be given to the holy ones of the Most High. Looking forward with longing to that one, then, he is saying, set no store by the kingdoms of the present age that before long will come to an end.

He then says, I made careful enquiry as to the fourth beast, which was different from all the other beasts and exceedingly fearsome; its teeth were of iron and its claws of bronze, it kept eating and crushing, and trampling the others with its feet (v. 19). It should be noted that he says its teeth were of iron and its claws of bronze: the Roman Empire receives taxes from everyone—hence his saying its teeth were of iron. And since also many in the Macedonian Empire served in the infantry, and soldiers are to a king what claws are to a beast, he was right to say its claws were of bronze, since he also called the third empire bronze. I made enquiries, in fact, | also of 1429

the ten horns on its head, and the fourth one that arose and knocked out the three in its place—that horn having also eyes, a mouth uttering lofty words, and its appearance more daunting than the rest (v. 20).
 We should not be surprised if above he said the horn was “little,” but here its appearance was more daunting than the rest. There is need to pay precise attention to what is said: when he saw the horn springing up, he called it “little” as arising from the little nation of Jews that at that stage had an obscure kingdom; but after it uprooted the three horns in its place, he was right to call its aspect more daunting than the rest.

So he continues to make further enquiries, asking why on earth did that horn make war on the holy ones and prevail over them (v. 21)—that is, humble them—until the Ancient of Days came and gave judgment in favor of the holy ones of the Most High, and the time came for the holy ones to take possession of the kingdom (v.
 22): I begged to learn what was the reference in that horn, which was exercising conceit, uttering arrogant words, and humbling the company of the holy ones until the Ancient of Days exercises righteous judgment, restores the kingdom to the holy ones, and destroys the power of the other.

He said to me as follows, As for the fourth beast, there will be a fourth empire on the earth, which will conquer all the empires, consume all the earth, trample it down, and cut it to pieces (v. 23). While people in olden times came to know this in riddles, we have learned it by experience, witnessing the outcome of the prophecy, the imposition of taxes, the poverty gripping most people, and all the other things we observe happening every day. As for the ten horns, ten kings will rise up (v. 24). Now, it ought be noted that he did not say they would rise up by succeeding one another, but would rise up at the one time; what follows confirms that this is the case. In their wake another king will arise, who will surpass all who precede him in causing troubles, and he will humble three kings. Unless they reigned at the one time, however, and instead succeeded one another, how would he humble three before him at the one time? It is therefore obvious that he is foretelling that the ten will arise at the one time toward the end, and the antichrist will arise as the last, get control of the empire, wage war on them, and destroy three of them | but 1432 will not be content with the victory over human beings.

Σβεσθήσεται γὰρ ἡ κατέχουσα πλάνη, καὶ λήξει ἡ τῶν εἰδώλων ἐξαπάτη, καὶ τότε ἀποκαλυφθήσεται ὁ ἄνομος. Τοῦτο δὲ καὶ ὁ

He will speak words against the Most High, and will wear out (or, as some manuscripts have it, “humble”) the holy ones of the Most High, and will plan to change seasons and the law (v. 25): he will give vent to such awful fury and frenzy as to hurl arrogant and blasphemous words at the Most High God, and pile every form of punishment on those loyally serving him and practicing holiness. He will imagine that he will totally overthrow the religion in force, and change its excellent way of life (implied by saying, he will plan to change seasons and the law, that is, the way of life prevailing at that time). He then goes on, It will be given into his hand, that is, God’s providence will allow it. And to bring out the length of time for these untimely troubles—after all, “the poor will not be forgotten forever, and the perseverance of the needy will not be lost forever”¹⁶⁸—he went on, after saying, it will be given into his hand, to say, for a time, and times, and half a time. He explained this to us more clearly at the end of the work, “From the time of the change in the regular usage and the permission for the abomination of desolation, 1,290 days.”¹⁶⁹ So a time, and times, and half a time means three and a half years for that horn uttering lofty words to be in power.

But the court sat, and they will bring a change to his rule, removing and destroying it forever (v. 26). Blessed Paul informed us of this more clearly: after saying what we already mentioned, he proceeded to say this, “Only until the one holding him in check is removed, and then the lawless one will be revealed, whom the Lord Jesus will consume with the breath of his mouth, and will annihilate him with the manifestation of his coming in the working of Satan with all power, signs, works of falsehood, and every kind of wicked deception among those who are perishing.”¹⁷⁰ Now, what he means is something like this: what is holding him in check for now must be removed; deceit is holding him in check and will be snuffed out, the deception of the idols will cease, and then the lawless one will be revealed. The Lord also said this in the sa-

Κύριος ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς Εὐαγγελίοις ἔφη. «Κηρυχθήσεται γὰρ τὸ Εὐαγγέλιον εἰς πάντα τὰ πέρατα τῆς γῆς εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς, καὶ τότε ἔξει τὸ τέλος.» Ἐκεῖθεν τοῦτο μαθὼν ὁ μακάριος Παῦλος διδάσκει Θεσσαλονικέας, καὶ δι' ἐκείνων ἅπαντας τοὺς τῆς εὐσεβείας ἐραστάς, ὅτι Μὴ νομίσητε νῦν | φανήσεσθαι τὸν τῆς ἀληθείας ἐχθρόν· δεῖ γὰρ πρότερον σβεσθῆναι τὴν κατέχουσαν τῶν εἰδώλων πλάνην, καὶ κρατυνθῆναι τῶν Εὐαγγελίων τὸ κήρυγμα, εἴθ' οὕτως ἀποκαλυφθῆναι τὸν ἄνομον. Καὶ διδάσκων τί δήποτε ταῦτα συγχωρεῖ γενέσθαι ὁ τῶν ὅλων Θεός, ἐπήγαγεν· «Ἀνθ' ὧν τὴν ἀγάπην τῆς ἀληθείας οὐκ ἐδέξαντο εἰς τὸ σωθῆναι αὐτούς, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο πέμψει αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεὸς ἐνέργειαν πλάνης, εἰς τὸ πιστεῦσαι αὐτούς, τῷ ψεύδει, ἵνα κριθῶσι πάντες οἱ μὴ πιστευσάντες τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, ἀλλ' εὐδοκήσαντες τῇ ἀδικίᾳ.» Ταῦτο δὲ τοῦτο καὶ ὁ Κύριος πρὸς Ἰουδαίους ἔφη· «Ἐγὼ ἦλθον ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Πατρὸς μου, καὶ οὐκ ἐδέξασθέ με· ἔρχεται ἄλλος ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τῷ ἰδίῳ, ἀκαεῖνον λήψεσθε.» Ταῦτα δὲ διδάσκων ὁ ἄγγελος τῷ Δανιήλ ἔφη, ὅτι «Λόγους πρὸς τὸν Ὑψιστον λαλήσει, καὶ τοὺς ἁγίους Ὑψίστου παλαιώσει, καὶ ὑπονοήσει τοῦ ἀλλοιωῦσαι καιροὺς καὶ νόμον· καὶ δοθήσεται ἐν χειρὶ αὐτοῦ ἕως καιροῦ, καὶ καιρῶν, καὶ ἡμισυ καιροῦ· καὶ τὸ κριτήριον ἐκάθισε, καὶ τὴν ἀρχὴν αὐτοῦ μεταστήσουσι, τοῦ ἀφανίσαι καὶ τοῦ ἀπολέσαι ἕως τέλους.» Ὅρατε πῶς τὰ αἰνιγματωδῶς ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀγγέλου ἡρμηνευμένα σαφῶς ὁ μακάριος ἐδίδαξε Παῦλος. Καὶ ὁ Κύριος δὲ τὰς κατὰ τῶν ἁγίων ἐπαναστάσεις προσημαίνων, ἔλεγεν· «Ἔσται θλίψις μεγάλη, οἷα οὐ γέγονεν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κόσμου ἕως τοῦ νῦν, οὐδ' οὐ μὴ γένηται· καὶ εἰ μὴ ἐκολοβώθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι ἐκεῖναι, οὐκ ἂν ἐσώθη

cred Gospels, “The Gospel will be proclaimed to the ends of the earth in testimony to them, and then the end will come.”¹⁷¹ From this blessed Paul learned what he teaches the Thessalonians, and through them all disciples of the true religion, Do not think | the enemy of truth will now appear; first of all the deceit of the idols that is holding him in check must be snuffed out, and the preaching of the Gospel disseminated, and only then will the lawless one be revealed. 1433

He then also gives a glimpse of his overthrow, “Whom the Lord Jesus will consume with the breath of his mouth, and will annihilate him with the manifestation of his coming.” He next brings out also the manner in which he comes, “His coming against Satan’s operating”: the devil will imitate the incarnation of our God and Savior, and just as the Lord came in a human nature and procured our salvation, so too the devil will take an instrument adapted to his own wickedness and with it give evidence of his special activity by deceiving indifferent people with false signs and portents and an appearance of miracles. To convey why on earth it is that the God of all permits these things to happen, he went on, “Because they refused to love the truth and so be saved, and hence God will send them a powerful delusion, leading them to believe what is false, so that all who have not believed the truth but took pleasure in unrighteousness will be condemned.”¹⁷²

The Lord also said the same thing to Jews, “I came in my Father’s name, yet you did not receive me; another comes in his own name, and him you will receive.”¹⁷³ Now, to convey this the angel said to Daniel, He will utter words against the Most High, will wear out the holy ones of the Most High, and plan to change seasons and the law. It will be given to him for a time and times and half a time. The court sat, and they will bring a change to his rule, removing and destroying it forever. See how what was interpreted vaguely by the angel blessed Paul conveyed clearly; and to suggest in advance the uprisings against the holy ones, the Lord also said, “There will be great tribulation such as has never occurred from the foundation of the world until now, nor will it occur. If those days had not been shortened, no one would be saved; but for the sake of the elect those says will be shortened.” Then, after advising his holy disciples, and through them all people, not to be deceived by those claiming Christ is here or there, since he will appear no longer in hiding or secretly but publicly in glory, he went on, “Then they will see the Son of Man coming on the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, and he will send his angels with a loud trumpet blast, and they will gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.”¹⁷⁴

In foretelling this also to Daniel, the angel added to what he had already said, | The kingship, authority, and greatness of the empires under the whole of heaven were given to the holy ones of the Most High. His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all governments will serve and obey him. At this point the end of the report (vv. 27–28). In other words, this is the end of all the affairs of this life, all the empires of earth coming to a close and the eternal kingdom being given to the holy ones of the Most High, with those in charge obeying and devotedly serving him, since his kingdom is eternal and does not come to an end. 1436

On hearing this, he goes on, I, Daniel, was filled with such deep fear as to prevent my thoughts being at peace in me, instead being confused and constantly upset, my appearance thus undergoing a great transformation. Nonetheless, far from bruiting abroad the mysteries revealed to me, I continued to keep them to myself.

Whereas blessed Daniel conveyed them to us, then, leaving aside criticism of the Jews for the time being, I for my part am quite surprised at some teachers of religion referring to the Macedonian Empire as the fourth beast.¹⁷⁵ After all, they ought to realize, firstly, that the third beast had four heads, which clearly indicated the division of the empire into four parts that happened

after the death of Alexander. Secondly, they should take note also that the fourth beast had ten horns at the one time, and the little horn uprooted three of them to make room for it, whereas it was four kings and not ten who succeeded to the empire of Alexander. And to pass over other matters and come to a conclusion, there is need to realize also that after the destruction of the fourth beast he said the kingdom would be given to the holy ones of the Most High. And that is why the court sat; but the holy ones of the Most High did not receive the kingdom after Antiochus Epiphanes. Now, even if the blessed Maccabees obtained a degree of power, it was not for long: Judas was in charge for three years, Jonathan for nineteen, Simon for eight, and the rest—not to deal with each one and protract the account—were in control for a short time before being either snuffed out by death or deprived of command while by some circumstance still alive. In particular, not even all of them were holy: some among them even proved evil; yet even conceding that all of them were holy, Herod disposed of them and was proclaimed king of the whole of Judea.¹⁷⁶ So how could what was said by the angel be true, that after the destruction of that horn the kingship, authority, and greatness of the empires under the whole of heaven were given to the holy ones of the Most High, and his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom? It is, in fact, not at all applicable to the Maccabees: instead of being | entrusted with kingship, they led troops and conquered, and met a rapid end. 1437

It follows, then, that the fourth beast is to be understood as the Roman Empire: at its end the ten kings will rise up at the one time, and the creator and teacher of all evil will ultimately appear, doing and suffering the things of which we were informed. After his destruction the coming of our God and Savior will be manifested, the judgment of all people will take place, and there will be an opening of “the books,” the record of each one’s life. The body of the beast will be handed over to fire, that is, those who have removed control from the soul and accorded authority to the body, adopting a material attitude in their life. The just judge, on the other hand, will give the kingdom to the holy ones, crying aloud, “Come, you blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you before the foundation of the world.”¹⁷⁷ May it be the good fortune of us all to attain this, thanks to the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with the Father and Holy Spirit be glory, for ages of ages. CHAPTER 8

¹⁷⁶ The Maccabees are prime candidates for “the holy ones” in a Jewish interpretation. Such a view brings Antiochus IV into focus as the “little horn,” the villain whose assault on Jewish religion could have prompted final composition of the book to encourage the persecuted. Theodoret’s view of prospective prophecy does not allow for this; so he brings in Herod from a century later as a ploy to disqualify the Maccabees.

In the third year of the reign of Belshazzar a vision came to me; I, Daniel, after the vision I had at the beginning (v. 1): with the empire of the Chaldeans (or Assyrians, if you like) still in control, I had another revelation after the previous one. The timing suggests it was more recent than that one: he saw the previous one in the first year of Belshazzar king of the Chaldeans, this one in the third year. Now, it is not without purpose that he indicates the time: it is to inform us that long before these things happened, he received foreknowledge of them from the God of all. I saw in the vision and it occurred as I saw it; I was in the fort in Susa, which is in the district of Elam (v. 2). In olden times Susa was the capital of Persia. Since he is learning of the overthrow of the Persian Empire, therefore, it follows that he seems to be having the revelation in that city. I saw in a vision means, I was not awake nor did I see it during the day: the God of all showed it to me in a dream. |

I was at the ubal: I seemed to be standing at the gate (some translators rendering it this way).¹⁷⁸ I raised my eyes and, lo, a ram standing at the ubal, with long horns, one longer than the other, and the longer one was rising to the heights (v. 3). He sees the Persian Empire in the form of a ram since it was flush with wealth and had a great abundance of resources. He perceived two horns on the ram because Cyrus was the first to reign over it and transmitted the empire only to his sons; when his son Cambyses died, soothsayers

οἱ μάγοι κατέσχον τὴν βασιλείαν· παρέλαβε δὲ αὐτὴν μικρὸν ὕστερον Δαρεῖος ὁ Ὑστάσπου, ὃς μέχρις ἐκγόνων καὶ ἀπογόνων τὴν βασιλείαν παρέπεμψεν, ἕως Δαρείου τοῦ τελευταίου, ὃν Ἀλέξανδρος ὁ Μακεδὼν ἀνελὼν τὴν βασιλείαν παρέλαβε. Τὰ τοίνυν δύο γένη τῶν βασιλέων διὰ τῶν δύο κεράτων σημαίνεται· καὶ ἄμφω μὲν ὑψηλὰ θεωρεῖ, ὑψηλότερον δὲ τοῦ προτέρου τὸ δεύτερον. Ὡς γὰρ ἤδη προειρήκαμεν, πλείων ἐπὶ Δαρείου καὶ Ξέρξου ἡ βασιλεία ἐγένετο. Ὁ μὲν γὰρ Κύρος τὸν τε Εὐξείνιον Πόντον καὶ τὴν Ἀσίαν ἐχειρώσατο· Δαρεῖος δὲ καὶ Σκύθας τοὺς Νομάδας τοῖς ὑπηκόοις συνέταξεν· ὁ δὲ Ξέρξης καὶ τῇ Εὐρώπῃ τῆς βασιλείας ἐπειράθη τὸν ζυγὸν ἐπιθεῖναι. Τούτου χάριν δύο κέρατα ἐν τῷ κριῷ θεωρεῖ, ἀλλὰ τὸ μὲν πρότερον, τὸ δὲ δεύτερον, καὶ τὸ δεύτερον ὑψηλότερον τοῦ προτέρου.

Αὐτίκα τοίνυν τῷ Ξέρξῃ καὶ Κύπριοι, καὶ Ῥόδιοι, Σάμιοί τε καὶ Λέσβιοι, καὶ Χῆοι, καὶ αἱ Κυκλάδες ἅπασαι συνεμάχουν τὴν κατὰ τῆς Ἑλλάδος στρατείαν ποιουμένων. Τούτου ἕνεκεν «Εἶδεν τὸν κριὸν κερατίζοντα κατὰ θάλασσαν, καὶ βορρᾶν, καὶ νότον. Καὶ πάντα, φησί, τὰ θηρία οὐ στήσεται ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἦν ὁ ἐξαιρούμενος ἐκ τῆς χειρὸς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐποίησε κατὰ τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐμεγαλύνθη.» Θηρία δὲ πάλιν τὰς ἄλλας βασιλείας καλεῖ τὰς μερικὰς, τὴν Σύρων, τὴν Κιλικίων, τὴν Ἀράβων, τὴν Αἰγυπτίων· θηρία δὲ αὐτὰς ὀνομάζει, διὰ τὸ φοβεράς εἶναι τοῖς ἀρχομένοις. Οὐδεμία τοίνυν, φησί, βασιλεία ἀντιστῆναι ἡδύνατο ἐκείνῃ τῇ βασιλείᾳ κερατιζούσῃ κατὰ νότον, καὶ βορρᾶν, καὶ θάλασσαν, οὔτε οἷός τε ἦν τις ἀνθρώπων ἐκείνης τῆς δυναστείας ἐλεύθερον ἀποφῆναι τινα, ἀλλ' ἅπαν τὸ δοκοῦν εἰς πέρας ἦγε.

ε'. «Καὶ ἐγώ, φησὶν, ἤμην συνιών.» Ταῦτα, φησί, θεωρῶν ἐλογίζομην παρ' ἐμαυτῷ, τὰ διὰ τούτων σημαινόμενα εὐρεῖν ἐφίεμενος· ἐμοῦ δὲ πυνθανομένου· «Ἴδου τράγος αἰγῶν ἤρχετο ἀπὸ Λιβὸς ἐπὶ πρόσωπον πάσης τῆς γῆς.» Τισὶ δὲ τῶν ἀντιγράφων πρόσκειται καὶ τοῦτο· «Καὶ οὐκ ἦν ἀπτόμενος τῆς γῆς, καὶ τῷ τράγῳ ἐκείνῳ κέρας ἐν θεωρητὸν ἀναμέσον τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτοῦ.» Τὴν Μακεδονικὴν ἐνταῦθα βασιλείαν ἐσήμανεν τοῦ ἐνυπνίου τὸ αἰνίγμα· τράγον δὲ αὐτὴν ὠνόμασε διὰ τὸ ταχὺ καὶ εὐκίνητον· τοῦ κριοῦ γὰρ ὀξύτερος ὁ τράγος. Ἀπὸ Λιβὸς δὲ αὐτὸν ἐληλυθέναι ἔφη· ἐπειδὴ πρότερον Αἴγυπτον χειρωσάμενος, οὕτως εἰς τὴν held power for a few months, but shortly afterwards Darius son of Hystaspes, who passed the empire on to his offspring and theirs up to the last Darius, whose empire Alexander the Macedonian took over after slaying him. So by the two horns he means two races of kings, seeing both to be tall, but the second taller than the first: as we said before, the empire became more extensive under Darius and Xerxes, Cyrus subjugating Euxine Pontus and Asia, Darius making subjects of the Scythian Nomads, and Xerxes endeavoring to put the yoke of empire on Europe.¹⁷⁹ This is the reason he sees two horns on the ram, the first and the second, with the second longer than the first.

I saw the ram charging to the sea, the north and the south (v. 4): he held everything to north and south in subjection as also westward to the very sea, and he forced most of the islands to serve as well; the people from Cyprus, Rhodes, Samos, Lesbos, Chios, and the Cyclades all joined Xerxes in the campaign against Greece. Hence he said that he saw the ram charging to the sea, the north and the south. All the beasts will fail to withstand it, none was rescued from its hand, it did as it wished and grew larger. By beasts he refers again to the other kingdoms individually, Syria, Cilicia, Arabia, Egypt, calling them beasts on account of their being fearsome to those they ruled. So no kingdom, he is saying, could resist that empire charging to the north, south, and west, nor could any human being liberate anyone from that power. Yet for all its appearance it met its end.

I was grasping the meaning (v. 5): while beholding this I pondered within myself, longing to discover | what was meant by it. 1441 While I was wondering, Lo, a goat was advancing from the southwest on the face of the whole earth, to which some of the manuscripts add, “not touching the ground, and on that goat one horn was visible between its eyes.”¹⁸⁰ The dream’s riddle here suggested the Macedonian Empire, calling it a goat because of its speed and fleetness of foot, a goat being faster than a ram. He said it came from the southwest: since it had previously subjugated Egypt, it thus ad-

¹⁷⁹ The author in v. 20 has the interpreter explain to Daniel that the two horns are the kings of Media and Persia, namely, “Darius the Mede” and Cyrus. Here, on the other hand, the two horns represent the two blood lines among the Persian kings.

Περσῶν ἐλήλυθε χώραν. Ἐνίκησε μὲν γὰρ τὸν Δαρεῖον ἐν τῇ Κιλικίᾳ, ἀλλ' ἐκεῖθεν τὴν Συρίαν, καὶ Φοινίκην, καὶ Παλαιστίνην διαδραμών, καὶ τὰς μὲν τῶν πόλεων ὁμολογίᾳ λαβὼν, τὰς δὲ βίᾳ ἐλών, εἰς τὴν Αἴγυπτον ὥρμησεν· εἴτα κακείνην τὴν βασιλείαν παραλαβὼν, τὴν Περσίδα καταλαμβάνει, καὶ τὴν μεγίστην αὐτῶν καταλύει βασιλείαν. Ἐν δὲ κέρως θεωρητὸν, τουτέστιν, ἐπίσημον καὶ περιβλεπτον, αὐτὸν καλεῖ τὸν Ἀλέξανδρον· ἀναμέσον δὲ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν τοῦ τράγου φῦναι λέγει τὸ κέρως, διὰ τὸ ἀγχίνου, καὶ συνετόν, καὶ πυκνὸν τῶν τοῦ Ἀλεξάνδρου φρενῶν.

Καὶ εἶδον αὐτὸν φθάσαντα ἕως τοῦ κριοῦ, καὶ ἐξηγριώθη πρὸς αὐτόν, καὶ ἔπαισε τὸν κριόν, καὶ συνέτριψεν ἀμφοτέρα τὰ κέρατα αὐτοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἦν ἰσχύς τῷ κριῷ τοῦ στῆναι ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἔρριψεν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, καὶ συνεπάτησεν αὐτόν, καὶ οὐκ ἦν ὁ ἐξαιρούμενος τὸν κριὸν ἐκ τῆς χειρὸς αὐτοῦ.» Πρώτοις μὲν γὰρ τοῖς ἐκείνου συμβαλὼν στρατηγοῖς ἐν τοῖς κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν τόποις, πᾶσαν αὐτῶν ἐκείνην ἀφείλατο τὴν ἀρχήν. Εἴτα αὖθις μετὰ τὴν ἐξ Αἰγύπτου ἐπάνοδον, περὶ τὴν Βαβυλῶνα παραταξάμενος, αὐτόν τε τὸν Δαρεῖον ἀνεῖλε, καὶ τὴν Περσικὴν κατέλυσε βασιλείαν. Συντριβῆναι δὲ λέγει ἀμφοτέρα τὰ κέρατα αὐτοῦ, ἐπειδὴ καὶ Μῆδοι καὶ Πέρσαι κατὰ ταὐτὸν ὠνομάζοντο, Κύρου τοῦ πρώτου βασιλεύσαντος, Μήδου μὲν ὄντος μητρόθεν, Πέρσου δὲ πατρώθεν· καὶ ἐπειδὴ ὁ πρῶτος αὐτῶν βασιλεὺς ἄμφω ταύτας εἶχε τὰς προσηγορίας, ἀναγκαίως καὶ οἱ ἀρχόμενοι, καὶ Μήδους καὶ Πέρσας τοὺς αὐτοὺς ὠνομάζον. η'. «Ὁ τράγος τῶν αἰγῶν ἐμεγαλύνθη ἕως σφόδρα.» Τῆς γὰρ Περσικῆς, εἴτ' οὖν Μηδικῆς, καταλυθείσης βασιλείας, τὸ κατὰ πάντων 1444 ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος ἀνεδέξατο κράτος· ἀλλὰ καὶ οὗτος ὀλίγον ἐπιβιώσας χρόνον, τοῦ βίου τὸ τέλος ἐδέξατο. Καὶ τοῦτο δὲ εἶδεν ὁ μακάριος Δανιήλ. Διὸ φησι· «Καὶ ἐν τῷ ἰσχυσῇ αὐτὸν συνετρίβη τὸ κέρως τὸ μέγα.» Μετὰ τὴν νίκην ἐκείνην τὴν μεγίστην, φησί, τὸ κοινὸν τῶν ἀνθρώπων ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος ἐδέξατο τέλος. «Καὶ ἀνέβη, φησί, τέσσαρα κέρατα ὑποκάτωθεν αὐτοῦ εἰς τοὺς τέσσαρας ἀνέμους τοῦ οὐρανοῦ.» Τέσσαρα δὲ κέρατα, vanced into the land of the Persians, conquering Darius in Cilicia, and from there traversing Syria, Phoenicia, and Palestine, taking some of the cities by surrender, securing others by force. It then also gained possession of that empire, occupied the Persians, and destroyed the greater part of their power. By the one horn visible, in the sense of famous and illustrious, he refers to Alexander; he says the horn was growing between its eyes on account of the shrewdness, intelligence, and sagacity of Alexander's thinking.

The goat advanced on the ram with the horns, which I had seen standing by the ubal, and ran at it with the force of its power. I saw it reach the ram, become furious with it, strike the ram, smash both its horns, and the ram had no strength to stand in its way. It threw it to the ground, trampled on it, and there was no one to rescue it from its hand (vv. 6–7). He first engaged with the other's generals in the places in Asia and removed all their control. Then when Darius engaged him in Cilicia with all his army, another battle was joined, Darius was put to flight, and Alexander wiped out many of the army and took the daughters of Darius captive. After the return from Egypt he next drew up his army near Babylon, slew Darius, and destroyed the Persian kingdom. Now, it says both its horns were smashed because both Medes and Persians were referred to at the same time, Cyrus being the first to come to the throne, who was a Mede on his mother's side and Persian on his father's; and since as their first king he bore both names, consequently also those ruled by them called the same people both Medes and Persians, both empires being joined into one. Secular historians also call the same people both Medes and Persians.¹⁸¹

With the ram's horns smashed in this way, the goat grew very big (v. 8): once the Persian Empire (or Median, if you like) was destroyed, | Alexander succeeded to power over everyone; but after a short life he met his end. This is what blessed Daniel saw—hence his saying, The big horn was smashed while it was powerful: despite that great conquest Alexander met the common fate of humankind. Four horns came up in its place toward the four winds of heaven. By four horns he hints at the four kings who succeeded

Alexander at the one time: Ptolemy son of Lagus took control of Egypt, Seleucus Nicanor got possession of Babylon and the other parts bordering on Syria, Antigonos was in charge of Asia, Antipater Macedonia—or, as some historians think, Philip, who is also called Arrhideus, brother of Alexander.¹⁸² Now, it should be noted that the third of the beasts he saw had four heads, and after the smashing of the one horn the goat grew four horns; so it is obvious that the same things are conveyed by the goat and the third beast.¹⁸³

Out of one of the horns emerged one strong horn (v. 9).¹⁸⁴ He means Antiochus Epiphanes, who was son of Antiochus called the Great. It grew to great size toward the south, toward the east, toward the southwest, and toward the strength: on becoming strong he prevailed over the king of Egypt, and subjected the nations lying toward the east. He campaigned also, he says, against the Jews and trampled on the holy capital (calling it strength on account of the divine grace blossoming in the temple at that time). To make this clearer he went on, It grew as high as the host of heaven, and fell on the earth from the host and from the stars, and trampled on them (v. 10). The first and second books of the Maccabees inform us of this more clearly, and the historian Josephus made a precise record of it, and we shall outline concisely the facts about him.¹⁸⁵ When the Jews of the high-priestly family rebelled against the high priest of the time, those anxious for the position went to Antiochus and persuaded him to change the Jewish way of life

¹⁸² Eusebius and Jerome, Guinot informs us (L'Exégèse, 719), nominate Philip.

¹⁸⁵ Theodoret proceeds to do so—give a typically "concise" account of the excesses of Antiochus, though without being prompted to concede that this tyrant prompted the composition of the work. He assures the reader his summary is based on 1 and 2 Maccabees and Josephus; he could also have been reading the more prolix accounts he found in Theodore's introduction to psalms such as Ps 44.

to the Greek, and to build a gymnasium in the city. When this happened, devout people were in mourning at seeing the blatant violation of the laws, while the remaining throng had no qualms about trampling on the divine law and treating with contempt the commandment about circumcision. When the uprising became more serious, Antiochus arrived and put to death most of the devout, and he had the audacity even to enter the precincts of the temple; after entering he sacked the whole temple, appropriating to himself the treasures, all the offerings, cups and bowls and vessels, the golden table, the golden censer, the lamp-stands made of gold, and in short all the instruments of divine worship. In addition to this he built in God's temple an altar to Zeus, filled the whole city with idols and obliged everyone to sacrifice, while he himself sacrificed a pig on the divine altar and named the temple after Zeus of Olympus. 1445

Blessed Daniel foretold all this: in the horn he sees Antiochus in person growing as high as the host of heaven, that is, venting insane rage against the God of all, to whom both people and temple were dedicated. It fell on the earth from the host and from the stars, and trampled on them: most of the people by transgressing God's law quickly fell away from heavenly things, and they were trampled down by this tyrant to their own destruction. He referred to them as stars on account of the fame and splendor of their piety, hinting also at the promise to Abraham, "I shall make your offspring like the stars of heaven."¹⁸⁶ He was not satisfied, in fact, with trampling down many of those called stars: It even exalted itself to the level of the ruler of the host, venting its frenzy and insane rage against God himself, king of this host—that is, the holy people—and continuing to do so until the leading general will rescue the captivity (v. 11),¹⁸⁷ that is, until we receive support from on high and attain salvation as a result of the archangel appointed as our patron.

Then he foretells with greater clarity the audacity that would be committed by Antiochus. On account of him sacrifice was disrupted by transgression: he did not permit the sacrifices prescribed by law to be made, requiring instead that they be performed in the Greek manner. He then goes on, Because it was done and things prospered for him: for the time being no impediment proved a check on his frenzy. The holy place will be devastated. Sin was offered up as a sacrifice, righteousness was brought to the ground, he had his way and prospered (v. 12): venting his tyrannical frenzy, he had the audacity to defile the altar by performing lawless sacrifice; he left the divine temple bereft of ornament, and he trampled on the laws of righteousness, | inflicting unjust slaughter on devout people, and (the text says) for the time being prospering while doing so. 1448

I heard a holy one speaking, and another holy one said to the one speaking, How long will the vision last, the sacrifice be abolished, the sin of devastation be offered up, and the holy place and the host be trampled down? (v. 13). The word phelmouni means “a person” in Greek; Syriac, which is close to Hebrew, also confirms this.¹⁸⁸ So blessed Daniel is saying, I heard one holy one asking another holy one. Clearly he is witnessing angels conversing and wanting to learn how long is the period of the offenses of impiety and lawlessness, the devastation of the temple, the illicit and loathsome sacrifice, and the oppression of the people. He replied to him, From evening to morning 2,300 days, and the holy place will be purified (v. 14). By evening he referred to the beginning of the calamities, and by morning to the end of the calamities, since night and darkness are figures of distress. From the present time, the beginning of the troubles, to the end, he is saying, the period is of that length. Calculated by the Hebrew system these days amount to six years and six months, this being the length of time the Jews’ calamity was in force.¹⁸⁹

When I, Daniel, had seen the vision, I looked for understanding of it (v. 15): having witnessed it, I wanted to understand and learn the precise meaning of what was signified by these riddles. Lo, there stood before me something looking like a man: I seemed to see a man. I heard a man's voice in the middle of the ubal, calling out in these terms, Gabriel, make that person understand the vision (v. 16): I heard someone else as well using a human voice and bidding the one standing near me, whom he called Gabriel, to interpret the riddle of the revelation to me. It is possible from what was said to come to the conclusion that the one giving the orders was the Lord. He came and stood close to my position (v. 17): as soon as he was bidden, he arrived and stood near me. When he came, I was astonished and fell prostrate. This is sufficient to convict Eunomius of conceit for his arrogant claim to know God's essence: if such a great prophet could not bear the sight of angels, despite its being adapted to the ability of the viewer, what could be more impious and abominable than those pretending to know the very essence of God?¹⁹⁰ Let us, however, return to the text before us. | He said to me, Understand, mortal man, the vision is still for the end of time: do not think that these things come to fulfillment in the present age; they will happen after a great number of years. When the set time has run its course, then each of them will reach its fulfillment. 1449

As he was speaking, I fell prostrate on the ground. He took hold of me and set me on my feet, and said, Lo, I make known to you what is to happen to this people at the end of the wrath; it abides until the end of time (vv. 18–19): perceiving me prostrate with fear, he first set me upright, then consoled me by making known why he had come, to inform me in my anxiety of the future and what in turn would overtake my people as a result of God's wrath. Then, in his wish to allay the fear besetting me, he mentioned that this would happen after a time, and interpreted to me the meaning of each of the things I had seen, saying, This ram you saw with two horns is the king of Medes and Persians (v. 20). Since at first Darius the Mede took possession of the Chaldean (or, if you like, Assyrian) Empire, and subsequently Cyrus the Persian, who was both Mede and Persian by a mixture of races, transferred the empire to the Persians, he consequently put Medes ahead of Persians in saying, the ram is king of Medes and Persians; Darius, called son of Arsamos, was the last of them and managed both empires, and Alexander the Macedonian disposed of him. The goat is the king of the Greeks, and the big horn which was between its eyes is the first king (v. 21), referring to Alexander. It was broken and four kings replaced it: four kings will arise from his nation, but not with his power (v. 22): after his death his empire will be divided into four kingdoms, but though those reigning over them are four, they will not succeed in achieving what he achieved, but will be seen to be much inferior to his strength.

At the end of their reign, when their sins are complete (v. 23): when they reach the height of impiety and transgress beyond the limits of my longsuffering. A king shameless in aspect will arise, skilled in intrigue, his power great, but not with his own power (vv. 23–24). In this he implies the malice of Antiochus, and in addition to the malice the power he acquired. Then, to stress | that he will do this with God's obvious permission, he consequently went on, But not with his own power. To the Assyrian also God says through the prophet Isaiah, "Will the axe take pride without the one to cut with it? or the saw be exalted without the one drawing it?"¹⁹¹ Likewise here too he says that Antiochus will show such audacity, not by being powerful, but with God's permission. He will cause stupendous destruction; he will govern, exert himself, destroy the strong and a holy people, and the yoke of his stocks will prosper (vv. 24–25), that is, nothing will be an obstacle to him; instead, he will do what he wishes. Of such people blessed David says in exhortation, "Do not vie with the one who prospers in his way, with the one who commits lawlessness":¹⁹² it often happens that people living a godless and lawless life prosper considerably in their lawless pursuits. So the yoke of his stocks will prosper means, he will force his subjects to carry out all he bids them.

He next foretells his malice and pretence: Guile in his hand, and in his heart he will be magnified, and by guile he will destroy many. From the outset he gave orders for a gymnasium to be built in Jerusalem, then for the eating of pork; later he obliged them to sacrifice. He indulged in fancy talk in an attempt to deceive devout people, and promised regal gifts in his longing to see everyone infringing the law—hence the verse Guile in his hand, and in his heart he will be magnified: he considered himself the greatest of all, and by guile he will destroy many whom he manages to deceive. He will be bent on the ruin of many, that is, he will adopt a plan for seeing many forfeit their own salvation. But not content with his insane rage against people, He will take a stand against the leader of leaders,¹⁹³ that is, he will vent his frenzy against the very King of kings and Lord of lords in an endeavor to defile the temple dedicated to him. And to bring out the license given him against the Jews, And he will crush them in his hand like eggs: he will do all this with great ease, like someone wanting to smash eggs in his hand. Here he is referring to the indifference of the Jews themselves, and the fact that by their own neglect of God's worship they were abandoned by God and deprived of providence from on high.

To this he adds, The vision of the evening and the morning that has been told is true (v. 26), that is, the time determined for the calamities is true beyond all doubt. But since there is a long interval in between, | seal up the vision because it will be in many days 1453 time, that is, leave it obscure for many people; I have made it clear to you in your longing before the event. I, Daniel, was confined to bed and was unwell for days. I got up and carried out the king's business. I was amazed at the vision, and there was no one who understood it (v. 27): on learning the troubles that would overtake the people in due course, I became so unwell as to fall a victim to illness. Yet despite being thus indisposed, I managed the work entrusted to me by the king, with no one aware of the cause of the sickness. He was in the habit of saying along with blessed Paul, "Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is made to stumble, and I am not indignant?" and "Weeping with those who weep, rejoicing with those who rejoice," and "If one limb suffers, all the limbs suffer together."¹⁹⁴ This man felt the same way, and he had this affection for his fellow slaves; and on learning of the calamities to overtake his fellow slaves many generations later, he kept weeping and wailing. He had a precise knowledge that he personally would not experience those things but would instead be freed from the present life before long.

It behooves us, too, to have this love for kith and kin and for our fellow servants, to think in common with one another, and imitate the fellow feeling of limbs with one another, since we are called members of one another, and have been given the name of Christ's body.¹⁹⁵ To him be the glory for ages of ages. CHAPTER 9

In the first year of Darius son of Ahasuerus, from the line of the Medes, who came to the throne of the Chaldeans, in the first year of his reign I, Daniel, understood from the books the number of years which the word of the Lord to Jeremiah the prophet said was required for the completion of the devastation of Jerusalem, seventy years (vv. 1–2). From this | it is clear that the empire of Darius son of Ahasuerus was different from that of Cyrus the Persian; what has now been read is consistent with what was said previously.¹⁹⁶ He did not, note, call Darius a Mede pure and simple, but from the line of the Medes; so it is clear he was not a Mede on both sides, that is, his father's and his mother's. Yet he reigned over the empire of the Chaldeans when Belshazzar was slain at night by divine intervention following on his act of impiety.¹⁹⁷ 1456

Now, it seems to me that this Darius reigned for a very short time: blessed Daniel, having a vision of the end of the captivity as already arrived at by that time, and reckoning the number of years at seventy, which the God of all had foretold through the prophet

¹⁹⁷ Theodoret had been led into initial troubles with the chronology of the book by the mention of "Darius the Mede" at the beginning of chapter 6, where he spoke (probably on the basis of 9:1) of "Darius son of Ahasuerus." Not showing a realization of the symbolic value of seven or seventy, he is now concerned to go to further lengths to rationalize the chronology by comparison of Daniel's statement on the extent of the exile with Jeremiah, Zechariah, and the apocryphal 1 Esdras, a book that has also been influenced by Jeremiah, taking the figure seventy as factual, not symbolic.

Jeremiah, begins to offer supplication to the Lord for the people. But the time expired with the reign of Cyrus king of the Persians, as blessed Esdras says: at the very beginning of the account after the introduction he mentions concisely the capture of Jerusalem, the enslavement of his country, and the deportation of the captives to Babylon, and he goes on, “And they were servants to him and to his sons until the Persians began to reign, in fulfillment of the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, Until the land has enjoyed its Sabbaths, it shall keep Sabbath all the time of its desolation until the completion of seventy years. In the first year of the reign of Cyrus king of the Persians, so that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be accomplished.”¹⁹⁸ The most divine Jeremiah also speaks this way, “Lo, I am sending, and shall take the country of the north, my servant Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and shall bring him against this land and against its inhabitants and against all the nations round about them. I shall utterly destroy them and make them an object of hissing and everlasting taunting. I shall remove from them a sound of joy, a sound of happiness, a sound of a bride, a sound of a bridegroom, fragrance of anointing and light of a lamp. The whole of its land will become a ruin, and they will be slaves among the nations for seventy years. On the completion of the seventy years I shall take vengeance on the king of Babylon and on that nation for their lawlessness, says the Lord, and on the land of the Chaldeans, and I shall reduce them to everlasting oblivion.”¹⁹⁹

While blessed Jeremiah, then, referred to the accomplishment of the time of the captivity with the destruction of the Chaldean Empire, Esdras put it even more clearly in making mention of Cyrus. Now, we find also the most divine Zechariah numbering these years differently: after the death of Cyrus and his son Cambyses, Darius the son of Hystaspes | gained control 1457

of Persia, the prophet mentioning the date, “On the twenty-fourth day of the eleventh month, the month of Shebat, in the second year of Darius the word of the Lord came to the prophet Zechariah son of Berechiah, son of Iddo”; and he went on shortly after, “The angel of the Lord replied, Lord Almighty, how long will you have no mercy on Jerusalem and the cities of Judah that you have scorned? It is the seventieth year.”²⁰⁰

While some commentators suffering from unbelief think the holy prophets are at odds, those nourished on the sacred words and enlightened by divine grace find consistency in the holy prophets. So come now, asking to receive that ray of light, let us make it clear to those unaware of it. Everyone—the divine Jeremiah, the divinely inspired Zechariah, and the blessed Esdras—is in agreement in citing the period of the captivity, all mentioning the number seventy; but they do not all begin to calculate this period by using the same date, some claiming that this number closes with Cyrus, some with Darius. Some including blessed Jeremiah and Esdras calculate it from the beginning of the first captivity, and logically close the seventy years with Cyrus king of the Persians. The most divine Zechariah, on the other hand, calculates it from the final siege in which they suffered ruin, and he claims the number of seventy years is completed under Darius king of the Persians, the divine temple in actual fact being built under the latter. You see, since the people were made captive three times—the first under Jehoiakim son of Josiah king of Judah, the second under Jeconiah, and the third under Zedekiah brother of Jehoiakim and uncle of Jeconiah—consequently they were also granted return three times: Cyrus the Persian was the first to release them, then Darius son of Hystaspes, and finally Artaxerxes son of Xerxes when he sent first Ezra and after him Nehemiah to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. The period for those who were the first taken captive, then, is completed under Cyrus the Persian, while this same period of the devastation of the temple reaches its conclusion in the second year of Darius son of Hystaspes. The result is that both prophecies, Jeremiah's and Zechariah's, as also the record of Esdras, are true and reliable.

²⁰⁰ Zech 1:7, 12. In later commentary on that prophet, Theodoret will have further problems getting the numbers to add up; he still feels numerical accuracy (or “textual coherence,” in Young’s term [Biblical Exegesis, 176]) is an element of prophecy. Only victims of “unbelief,” he goes on to say, could question that verity—unaware he is creating a false problem. Antiochene exegesis generally suffers badly from this inability to recognize apocalyptic.

Blessed Daniel, the text says, understood this, did his calculations, and found the time approaching. I turned to the Lord God to seek an answer by prayer and supplication with fasting, sackcloth, and ashes (v. 3): I did not simply await freedom from captivity: I offered entreaty to the Lord, seeking liberation for my fellows; if he promises | good things even countless times, but we render 1460 ourselves unworthy of the gift, we prove an obstacle to the divine generosity. God says as much through Ezekiel the prophet as well, "At length I shall promise a nation or kingdom to rebuild and plant them, but if that nation turns away and does evil, I will not bring upon it all the good things I promised."²⁰¹ Instructed in these things, blessed Daniel gave wings to his prayer with fasting, sackcloth, and ashes, and offered it to God. I prayed to the Lord my God, and made confession in the words, Lord, great and wonderful God, keeping covenant and mercy with those who love you and keep your commandments (v. 4).²⁰² He calls him great and wonderful for his ability to do great and wonderful things. Godly men, after all, are accustomed to apply divine names on the basis of benefits conferred; he spoke of his keeping covenant and mercy with those who love him in recalling the promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Being very precise in his prayer, he mentions that he does not keep it with anyone, but with those who love him and keep his commandments: if someone transgresses your commands, he renders himself unworthy of the promises.

This happened in our case, too. We sinned, we transgressed, we committed impiety and we turned from your commandments and your judgments (v. 5). Having very appropriately assigned those honorable and marvelous titles to God, he implied the direct opposite of themselves. It was not sufficient for him to say We sinned; he went on to say We transgressed, we committed impiety, being ungrateful for your benefits, by the phrase we committed impiety meaning the choice of other gods that were lifeless, with no senses or strength.

²⁰² It is thought that originally v. 4 was followed immediately by v. 21, and that a scribe has inserted at this point an older prayer written in better Hebrew—features of the text that would be lost on Theodoret, though he might have noted that the prayer is a communal confession, not an individual request for enlightenment.

1461 ζ'. «Σοί, Κύριε, ἡ δικαιοσύνη, καὶ ἡμῖν ἡ αἰσχύνη | τοῦ προσώπου, ὡς ἡ ἡμέρα αὕτη, ἀνδρὶ Ἰούδα, καὶ τοῖς κατοικοῦσιν Ἱερουσαλήμ, καὶ παντὶ Ἰσραὴλ, τοῖς ἐγγύς καὶ τοῖς μακράν, ἐν πάσῃ τῇ γῇ, οὗ διέσπειρας αὐτοὺς ἐκεῖ ἐν ἀθετήσει αὐτῶν, ἧ ἠθέτησάν σε, Κύριε.» Τὰ μὲν γὰρ, φησὶν, ὑπὸ σοῦ γεγεννημένα, Δέσποτα, τὴν σὴν κηρύττει δικαιοσύνην· ἡμεῖς δὲ διὰ τὴν πολλὴν ἡμῶν παρανομίαν ἐν αἰσχύνῃ γενόμενοι, τῆς ἰδίας ἀγνωμοσύνης κατηγοροῦμεν. Σοὶ μὲν γὰρ ἐκ τῆς ἡμετέρας ἀσεβείας οὐδεμία προσεγένετο βλάβη· ἡμεῖς δὲ τῶν σπερμάτων ἐδεξάμεθα τοὺς καρπούς, καὶ ἐλεεινῶς, ὅτι τῶν ὁμοφύλων κατηγορῶν, καὶ ἑαυτὸν τοῖς παραβάταις συνάπτει.

η'. «Ἡμῖν, φησὶν, ἡ αἰσχύνη τοῦ προσώπου, καὶ τοῖς βασιλεῦσιν ἡμῶν, καὶ τοῖς ἄρχουσιν ἡμῶν, καὶ τοῖς πατράσιν ἡμῶν, οἵτινες ἡμάρτομέν σοι.» Ἰκανὸν δὲ τούτων ἕκαστον εἰς ἕλεον ἐπικάμψαι καὶ τὸν ὁμότατον, μήτιγε τὸν ἡμερώτατον καὶ φιланθρωπότατον. Δείκνυσι γὰρ διὰ τῶν λόγων οὐ τοὺς εὐτελεῖς τοῦ λαοῦ καὶ ἀφανεῖς μόνους αἰσχύνῃς ἀναπλησθέντας, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτοὺς τοὺς βασιλέας, καὶ τοὺς ἄρχοντας, καὶ τοὺς ἱερέας· τούτους γὰρ πατέρας ὠνόμασε. Καὶ δεικνύς τῆς τιμωρίας τὸ δίκαιον, προστέθεικεν· «Οἵτινες ἡμάρτομέν σοι.» Ἄλλ' ἡμεῖς μὲν ἄξιους ἐχομισάμεθα τῆς παρανομίας τοὺς καρπούς·

θ'. «Τοῦ Κυρίου δὲ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν οἱ οἰκτιρμοὶ καὶ ἰλασμοί.» Πρέπει γὰρ σοι, ἡμέρῳ ὄντι καὶ φιλανθρώπῳ, ἐλέω καὶ οἴκτῳ περὶ ἡμᾶς χρῆσασθαι. Καὶ ἐπιμένων τῇ τῆς παρανομίας κατηγορίᾳ (ἤκουσε γὰρ τοῦ Θεοῦ δι' ἑτέρου προφήτου λέγοντος· «Λέγε σὺ τὰς ἀνομίας σου πρῶτον, ἵνα δικαιωθῇς»), οἰκτιοῦται τὴν τοῦ λαοῦ παρανομίαν, καὶ τὴν ταύτης ποιεῖται κατηγορίαν, τὸν θεῖον ἕλεον ἐπαγγέλλων.

ι'. «Ὅτι ἀπέστημεν, φησί, καὶ οὐκ εἰσηκούσαμεν τῆς φωνῆς Κυρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, πορεύεσθαι ἐν τοῖς νόμοις αὐτοῦ, οἷς ἔδωκε κατὰ πρόσωπον ἡμῶν ἐν χειρὶ τῶν δούλων αὐτοῦ τῶν προφητῶν.» Φωτιζόμενοι γὰρ, φησὶν, ὑπὸ τῶν προφητῶν, καὶ ποδηγούμενοι πρὸς τὸ δέον,

Then to bring out God's constant care for them and the people's great insensitivity, he went on, We have not hearkened to your servants the prophets, who kept speaking in your name to our kings, to our rulers, to our fathers, and to the whole people of the land (v. 6): your grace did not cease watching over us and speaking through the prophets, at one time to kings and rulers, at another to priests and teachers (referring to them as fathers), and on many occasions to the whole people. Yet even when this happened, we continued to contradict you.

Hence he was right to proceed, With you, Lord, is righteousness, and with us shame | of countenance, as on this day, with a man 1461 of Judah, the inhabitants of Jerusalem and all Israel, near and far, in all the land where you scattered them because of the lawlessness they committed against you, Lord (v. 7): what has been done by you, Lord, proclaims your righteousness, whereas we are ashamed of our great lawlessness and accuse our own ingratitude. While, in fact, no harm comes to you from our impiety, we reap the fruits of these seeds (spoken in pitiable fashion, because in accusing his fellows he also associates himself with the transgressors). Shame of countenance affects us, our kings, our rulers, and our fathers in as far as we sinned against you (v. 8). Any of these would suffice to move even the cruelest person to pity, not to mention the gentlest and most loving. He is showing in these words, you see, not only the lowly and insignificant members of the people to be affected by shame, but also the very kings, rulers, and priests, referring to them as fathers. And to bring out the justice of the retribution, he added since we sinned against you.

While we reaped fruit befitting our lawlessness, to the Lord our God belong compassion and propitiation (v. 9): it is proper to you in your gentleness and love to exercise mercy and compassion toward us. And persisting in the accusation of lawlessness (he heard God saying in another prophet, you see, "Tell your sins first so as to be justified"),²⁰³ he applies to himself the people's lawlessness and censures it, proclaiming divine mercy. Because we were unfaithful and did not hearken to the voice of the Lord our God so as to walk by his laws which he brought to our notice through his servants the prophets (v. 10): though enlightened by the prophets and guided in our duty, we kept resisting all the time.

ἀντιλέγοντες πάντα τὸν χρόνον διετελέσαμεν.

1464 ια'. «Καὶ πᾶς Ἰσραὴλ παρέβησαν τὸν νόμον σου, καὶ ἐξέκλιναν τοῦ μὴ ἀκοῦσαι τῆς φωνῆς σου.» Εἰ γὰρ οἱ μὲν παρέβησαν, οἱ δὲ φύλακες ἀκριβεῖς τῶν σῶν νόμων ἐγένοντο, οὐκ ἂν τὴν συμφορὰν ὑπέμειναν ταύτην· ἐπειδὴ δὲ κοινὴ παρὰ πάντων ἡ παρανομία τετόλμηται, εἰκότως φησὶν· «Ἐπῆλθεν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ἡ κατάρρα, καὶ ὁ ὄρκος ὁ γεγραμμένος ἐν τῷ νόμῳ Μωσῆ δούλου τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅτι ἡμάρτομεν αὐτῷ.» Ὅρκον δὲ καλεῖ τὸν ἐν τῷ Δευτερονομίῳ ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ γεγενημένον· «Ἀρῶ γὰρ, φησὶν, εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν τὴν χεῖρά μου, καὶ ὁμοῦμαι τῇ δεξιᾷ μου, καὶ | ἐρῶ· Ζῶ ἐγὼ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, ὅτι παροξυνῶ ὡς ἀστραπὴν τὴν μάχαιράν μου, καὶ ἀνθίσσεται κρίματος ἡ χεὶρ μου, καὶ ἐκδικήσω, καὶ ἀνταποδώσω δίκην τοῖς ἐχθροῖς μου, καὶ τοῖς μισοῦσί με ἀνταποδώσω· μεθύσω τὰ βέλη μου ἀφ' αἵματος, καὶ ἡ μάχαιρά μου φάγεται κρέα ἀφ' αἵματος τραυματιῶν, καὶ αἰχμαλωσίας, ἀπὸ κεφαλῆς ἀρχόντων ἐθνῶν.» Καὶ μικρὸν πρὸ τούτων φησὶν· «Εἶπον· Διασπερῶ αὐτούς, παύσω δὲ ἐξ ἀνθρώπων τὸ μνημόσυνον αὐτῶν.» Τὴν δὲ κατάραν, τὴν ὑπὸ τῶν ἐξ φυλῶν, τὴν ἐν τῷ ὅρει τῷ Γεβάλ γεγενημένην λέγει. Ἐκεῖνος τοίνυν, φησὶν, ὁ ὄρκος, καὶ ἡ κατάρρα ἡ ἐν τῷ νόμῳ Μωσέως γεγενημένη, πέρας ἔλαβεν ἐφ' ἡμῶν.

ιβ'. «Καὶ ἔστησε τοὺς λόγους αὐτοῦ, οὓς ἐλάλησεν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς κριτὰς ἡμῶν, καὶ ὅσοι ἔκριναν ἡμᾶς, ἐπαγαγεῖν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς κακὰ μεγάλα.» Καὶ δεικνύς τὴν τῶν κακῶν ὑπερβολὴν, «Οἶα, φησὶν, οὐ γέγονεν ὑποκάτω παντὸς τοῦ οὐρανοῦ κατὰ τὰ γενόμενα ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ.» Οὐ γὰρ εὐρίσκω, φησί, παράδειγμα τῶν ἡμετέρων κακῶν. Εἴτα διδάσκων τῆς θείας προρρήσεως τὸ ἀψευδές·

ιγ'. «Καθώς, φησί, γέγραπται ἐν τῷ νόμῳ Μωσέως.» Καὶ τῆς τιμωρίας ἐμφαίνων τὸ δίκαιον, «Πάντα, φησί, τὰ κακὰ ἦλθεν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, καὶ οὐκ ἐδεήθημεν τοῦ προσώπου Κυρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, ἀποστρέψαι ἀπὸ τῶν ἀδικιῶν ἡμῶν, καὶ τοῦ συνιέναι ἐν πάσῃ ἀληθείᾳ σου, Κύριε.» Οὐδὲ γὰρ τῶν τοσούτων ἡμῶν καὶ τηλικούτων ἐπενεχθεισῶν συμφορῶν, μεταμελεία χρήσασθαι ἡβουλήθημεν, καὶ παύσασθαι μὲν τῆς προτέρας παρανομίας, θεραπεῦσαι δὲ σε τῇ φυλακῇ τῶν νόμων. Διό φησιν·

ιδ'. «Ἐγρηγόρησε Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν ἐπὶ τὴν κακίαν ἡμῶν, καὶ ἤγαγεν αὐτὴν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς.» Ὡς περ γὰρ τινὰ ὕπνον τὴν μακροθυμίαν ἀποσεισάμενος, τὴν ἀξίαν τῶν πεπολιτευμένων ἡμῶν ἐπήγαγε τιμωρίαν· ὅτι Ἅγιος, φησί, Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν ἐπὶ πᾶσαν τὴν ποίησιν αὐτοῦ ἦν ἐποίησε, διότι οὐκ εἰσηκούσαμεν τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ. Αὐτὸς μὲν γὰρ, φησὶν, ἀθῶός ἐστι, καὶ οὐδεμιᾶς μέψεως ἐφ' οἷς ἐποίησεν ἄξιος· ἡμεῖς δὲ δυσσεβεῖα καὶ πονηρίαν συζήσαντες τὴν τιμωρίαν ἐπεσπασάμεθα. Οὕτω

All Israel transgressed your law, and turned away from listening to your voice (v. 11): if some had transgressed while others proved exact in observing your laws, they would not have suffered this calamity; but since transgression was committed by everyone in common, he was right to say, The curse has come upon us, and the oath written in the law of God's servant Moses, because we have sinned against him. By oath he refers to the one made in Deuteronomy by God, "I shall lift up my hand to heaven and swear by my right hand, and say, | As I live forever, I shall whet my sword like a lightning flash, my hand will take hold of judgment, I shall take vengeance on my foes and avenge myself on those who hate me. I shall make my arrows drunk with blood, and my sword will eat flesh from bloody wounds, from captivity and from the head of princes of nations." And a little before this he said, "I declared, I shall scatter them and cancel their memory from humankind."²⁰⁴ By curse he means the one made by the six tribes on Mount Ebal.²⁰⁵ So he is saying, The oath and the curse contained in the Law of Moses took effect with us. 1464

He established his words that he spoke against us and against our judges, and all of us they judged so as to bring on us awful troubles (v. 12). And to bring out the great extent of the troubles, What has not happened under the whole of heaven has happened in Jerusalem: I find no parallel with our troubles. Then to bring out the reliability of the divine prophecy, As is written in the law of Moses (v. 13). And to highlight the justice of the retribution, All the troubles have come upon us, and we have not presented our case to the Lord our God to turn away from our iniquities and to ponder all your truth, Lord: despite so many awful calamities befalling us, we refused to have recourse to repentance, put a stop to the former lawlessness, and give attention to you by the observance of your laws. Hence he says, The Lord our God kept watch over our evil and brought it upon us (v. 14): just as though aroused from longsuffering as from some sleep, he imposed on us retribution befitting our behavior. The Lord our God is holy in doing all his doings, because we did not hearken to his voice: whereas he is innocent and deserving of no blame for what he has done, we drew punishment down upon ourselves τῆς παρανομίας τὴν κατηγορίαν ποιησάμενος, ἱκετεύει λοιπὸν καὶ τὴν φιλανθρωπίαν αἰτεῖ.

²⁰⁴ Deut 32:40–42, 26.

²⁰⁵ Cf. Deut 27:13. The ritual described in Deut 26:11–16, of blessing and cursing on two mountains by two groups of six tribes, probably requires further comment by Theodoret.

1465 | ιε', ις'. «Καὶ νῦν, Κύριε ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν, ὃς ἐξήγαγες τὸν λαόν σου ἐκ γῆς Αἰγύπτου ἐν χειρὶ κραταιᾷ, καὶ ἐποίησας σεαυτῷ ὄνομα, ὥς ἡ ἡμέρα αὕτη, ἡμάρτομεν, ἡνομήσαμεν· Κύριε, ἐν πάσῃ ἐλεημοσύνῃ σου ἀποστραφῆτω δὴ ὁ θυμός σου ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεώς σου Ἰερουσαλὴμ, ὅρους ἀγίου σου.» Ἀναμιμνήσκει τῶν προτέρων εὐεργεσιῶν, τῇ εὐγνωμοσύνῃ | τῆς μνήμης τὸν ἔλεον ἐπισπώμενος, καὶ φησι· Ῥάδιόν σοι, Δέσποτα, τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἡμῖν χάρισσασθαι· καὶ γὰρ ἤδη θαυματουργίαις μυρίαις, καὶ τιμωρίαις κατὰ τῶν Αἰγυπτίων χρησάμενος, τῆς πικρᾶς δουλείας ἐκείνης τὸν σὸν λαὸν ἡλευθέρωσας, ὥς εἰς ἅπαντας ἀνθρώπους τῶν γεγεννημένων θαυμάτων τὴν φήμην δραμεῖν, καὶ τὴν σὴν δύναμιν ἄπασιν γενέσθαι δῆλῃν. Καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἡμεῖς ἡμάρτομεν, καὶ τῆς σῆς φιλανθρωπίας ἀναξίους ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς ἀπεφήναμεν, τὴν σὴν πόλιν ἱκετεύομεν τῆς σῆς ἀξιωθῆναι φειδοῦς, καὶ τὸ ὅρος ἐκεῖνο, ὃ διὰ τῆς σῆς ἐπιφανείας ἅγιον ἀπέφηνας. Καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἀνάξιος ἦν ὁ λαὸς τούτων τυχεῖν, σφόδρα ἁρμοδίως ἐπήγαγεν· «Ἐνεκέν σου, Κύριε.» Τὰ σεαυτῷ, φησί, πρέποντα ποίησον, Δέσποτα, καὶ μὴ τὰς ἡμετέρας λογίσῃ παρανομίας, ἀλλὰ τὰς ἀενάους τῆς σῆς φιλανθρωπίας πηγὰς. Οἶδε γὰρ καὶ αὐτός, ὥς τὸ Θεῖον ἄσωματον, ἐτέρως δὲ ἄνθρωπος ὢν οὐκ οἶδε διαλεχθῆναι Θεῷ. Ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἕκαστος διὰ μὲν τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν ὁρᾷ, διὰ δὲ τῶν ὠτων ἀκούει, τέθεικε ταῦτα καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ ἁσωμάτου Θεοῦ, τὰς by living a life of impiety and wickedness.

Having thus delivered an accusation of their lawlessness, he now turns to supplication and begs for lovingkindness. And now, Lord our God, who rescued your people from the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and made your name renowned as to this day, we have sinned, we have done wrong. Lord, in all your mercy let your anger be turned away from the city of Jerusalem, your holy mountain (vv. 15–16). He recalls the former benefits, | attracting mercy by the courtesy of recollection, meaning, It is easy for you, Lord, to grant us freedom: you have already been responsible for countless miracles and sanctions against the Egyptians, freeing your people from that harsh slavery, with the result that the report of the miracles worked has sped to all people and your power is obvious to all. Since we have sinned and rendered ourselves unworthy of your lovingkindness, we beg that your city be accorded your compassion, along with that mountain which you made holy by your coming. Continuing his supplication for the city, Because through our sins and our iniquities and our fathers' Jerusalem and your people have become an object of ridicule among all our neighbors: on account of our transgressions and our fathers' sins, we provided malicious joy to our neighbors, and the celebrated and famous city suffered devastation. 1465

Hearken now, Lord our God, to the prayer of your servant and his request, and reveal your face to your devastated sanctuary (v. 17): accept the entreaty of your servant, Lord, and consider the devastation of the place sanctified by you, and once again fill it with your grace. And since the people were unworthy to receive this, it was very appropriate for him to add for your sake, Lord: do what befits you, Lord, and consider not our transgressions but the ever-flowing springs of your lovingkindness. Continuing the prayer, Incline your ear, O my God, and hear; open your eyes and see our desolation and your city's (v. 18). And to associate the city still more closely with him, he said, which bears your name. The phrase Incline your ear and open your eyes means, Do not turn away from my appeal: listen to my prayer with benevolence. He was aware, you see, that the divinity is incorporeal, but as a human being he did not know how to converse with God in any other way; since each person sees with his eyes and listens with his ears, he put it this way even in the case of the incorporeal God, referring by it to his actions.

ἐνεργείας οὕτω καλῶν. Τούτοις ἐπάγει· «Ὅτι οὐκ ἐν ταῖς δικαιοσύναις ἡμῶν ἡμεῖς ῥίπτομεν τὸν οἰκτιρμὸν ἡμῶν ἐνώπιόν σου, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τοὺς οἰκτιρμούς σου τοὺς πολλούς, Κύριε.» Οὐ γὰρ ταῖς δικαιοσύναις ἡμῶν, φησὶν, θαρροῦντες τὴν σὴν αἰτοῦμεν φιλανθρωπίαν, ἀλλὰ τῷ σῷ πεποιθότες ἐλέω τολμῶμεν τὴν δέησιν.

1468 ιθ'. «Εἰσάκουσον οὖν, Κύριε, ἰλάσθητι, Κύριε, πρόσχες, Κύριε· μὴ χρονίσῃς ἕνεκέν σου, ὁ Θεός | μου.» Ἐξίον δὲ θαυμάσαι τῶν εἰρημένων τὴν τάξιν. Ἰκετεύει γὰρ τὸν Θεόν, πρῶτον μὲν ἀκοῦσαι τῆς προσευχῆς, καὶ μὴ ἀπώσασθαι τὴν ἰκετηρίαν· εἶτα ἀκούσαντα ἡλεῶν γενέσθαι, ἡλεῶν δὲ γενόμενον προσέχειν εὐμενῶς, δείξαντα δὲ τὴν οἰκίαν εὐμένειαν ποιῆσαι καὶ πληρῶσαι τὴν ἰκετείαν. Τούτοις ἐπήγαγε· Μὴ χρονίσῃς, ἀντὶ τοῦ, Μὴ ἀναβάλλῃ τὴν δέησιν εἰς ἕτερον χρόνον, ἀλλ' αὐτίκα τῆς ἐπιφανείας ἡμᾶς ἀξιῶσον. Καὶ τῆς εὐχῆς δὲ τὸ τέλος τῆς τοῦ Δαυὶδ ταπεινοφροσύνης ἄξιον. «Ἐνεκέν σου, φησὶν, ὁ Θεός μου.» Οὐδὲ γὰρ ἐγώ, φησὶν, ἄξιος τοῦ ταύτην λαβεῖν τὴν χάριν· ἀλλ' «Ὅτι τὸ ὄνομά σου ἐπικέκληται ἐπὶ τὴν πόλιν σου, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν λαόν σου.» Οὕτως αἰτήσας, καὶ μετὰ τοσαύτης προθυμίας τὴν ὑπὲρ τῶν ὁμοφύλων ἰκετηρίαν προσενεγκών, καὶ ἀντιβολήσας μὴ χρονίσαι τὸν Θεόν, παραυτίκα τῆς θείας ἀποκρίσεως ἀπολαύει.

κ'. «Ἔτι γάρ μου, φησί, λαλοῦντος, καὶ προσευχομένου, καὶ ἐξαγορεύοντος τὰς ἀνομίας μου, καὶ τὰς ἀμαρτίας τοῦ λαοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, καὶ ῥίπτοῦντος τὸν ἕλεόν μου ἐναντίον Κυρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ μου. Καὶ ἔτι μου λαλοῦντος ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ, καὶ ἰδοὺ ἀνὴρ Γαβριήλ, ὃν εἶδον ἐν τῇ ὁράσει μου ἐν ἀρχῇ, πετόμενος.» Ταύτην, φησί, τὴν ἰκετείαν προσφέρων, καὶ τῆς κοινῆς ἡμῶν παρανομίας κατηγορῶν, μηδέπω πέρας ἐπιθεὶς τῇ προσευχῇ, ὁρῶ τὸν Γαβριήλ πετόμενον, καὶ πρὸς ἐμὲ θέοντα· ἔγνων δὲ τίς ἐστίν, ἤδη πρότερον ὄναρ αὐτὸν θεασάμενος· καὶ τὴν προσηγορίαν δὲ αὐτοῦ ἔμαθον, ἀκούσας τηνικαῦτα τοῦ Δεσπότη καλέσαντος, καὶ προστάξαντος· Γαβριήλ, συνέτισον ἐκεῖνον τὴν ὄρασιν. Ἄνδρα δὲ αὐτὸν κέκληκεν ἀπὸ τῆς θέας τὴν προσηγορίαν τεθεικώς. Καὶ γὰρ ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ ἐνυπνίῳ φησὶν· «Ἴδου ἔστη ἐνώπιόν μου ὡς ὄρασις ἀνδρός.» Οὐ χάριν καὶ ἐνταῦθα φησιν· «Ἴδου ὁ ἀνὴρ Γαβριήλ, ὃν εἶδον ἐν τῇ ὁράσει μου ἐν ἀρχῇ, πετόμενος.» Πεταῖσθαι δὲ καὶ αὐτὸν ἔφη ὀξέως διατέμνοντα τὸν ἀέρα, καὶ παρ' αὐτὸν θέοντα θεασάμενος. «Καὶ ἡψατό μου ὥσπερ ὥραν θυσίας ἐσπερινῆς.» Ἀντὶ τοῦ, κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τῆς ἐσπερινῆς λατρείας, ἢ τοσοῦτον καιρὸν, ὅσον ἡ ἐσπερινὴ κατέχει λατρεία.

He went on from here, We do not direct our appeal for compassion in your sight on the basis of our righteous actions, but on your great compassion, Lord: we do not beg your lovingkindness by relying on our righteous actions; rather, we presume to pray with trust in your mercy. So hearken, Lord, be propitious, Lord, attend, Lord, for your sake, O my God, do not delay (v. 19). It is worth admiring the sequence of what is said: | he implores God, first, to hear his prayer and not to reject his appeal; then, on hearing him, to be propitious; and on being propitious, to give heed with benevolence; and on showing his characteristic benevolence, to carry out and fulfill the request. To this he added, Do not delay, that is, Do not put off the request any longer, but immediately grant us your coming. The end of the prayer is in keeping with Daniel's humility, For your own sake, O my God: I am not worthy to receive this grace, but because your city and your people are called by your name. 1468

Having thus made the request, offered the appeal for his fellows with such enthusiasm, and entreated God not to delay, he immediately receives the divine reply. While I was still speaking, praying, confessing my iniquities and the sins of the people of Israel, and directing my appeal for compassion in the sight of the Lord my God—while I was still speaking in my prayer, lo, a man, Gabriel, whom I had seen in my vision in the beginning, came in flight (vv. 20–21): while offering this appeal, criticizing our common lawlessness, and before having brought the prayer to a close, I saw Gabriel in flight hastening toward me. I knew who he was, having already seen him before in a dream, and I had learned his name, having heard it when the Lord called it and gave orders, “Gabriel, make him understand the vision.”²⁰⁶ Now, he spoke of him as a man, using the word he had derived from the vision: in that dream it was said, “Lo, there stood before me something looking like a man”; hence he says here Lo, a man, Gabriel, whom I had seen in my vision in the beginning, came in flight. He said he came in flight since he moved through the air at speed and hurried toward him. He touched me as if at the hour of evening sacrifice, that is, at the time of evening worship, or for as long a time as evening worship took.

Ἐν ἀρχῇ τῆς δεήσεώς σου ἐξῆλθεν ὁ λόγος, καὶ ἐγὼ ἦλθον τοῦ ἀναγγεῖλαί σοι, ὅτι ἀνὴρ ἐπιθυμιῶν σὺ εἶ· καὶ ἐννοήθητι ἐν τῷ ῥήματι, καὶ σύνης ἐν τῇ ὀπτασίᾳ.» Εὐθύς, φησὶν, ἡνίκα ἤρξω προσεύχεσθαι, δεξάμενος ὁ κοινὸς Δεσπότης τὴν ἱκετείαν, καὶ θεασάμενός σου τὴν ἀγαθὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, ἀπέστειλέ με διδάξαι σε τὰ ἐσόμενα. Σὺ δὲ ἀκριβῶς πρόσεχε τοῖς λεγομένοις· βαθυτέρα γὰρ ἢ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον τὰ λεχθησόμενα. Αἰνιγματωδῶς δέ ἐστιν ὅτε τὰ θεῖα λέγεται καὶ γράφεται, ἵνα μὴ πᾶσιν ἢ δῆλα τὰ τοῖς ἀγίοις ἀποκαλυπτόμενα· οὕτω γὰρ ἂν εὐκαταφρόνητα ἐγεγόνει ὁμοίως ὑπὸ πάντων γνωριζόμενα. Ἄνδρα δὲ αὐτὸν ἐπιθυμιῶν καλεῖ, ἢ ὡς νηστεία καὶ κακουχία ἑαυτὸν ἐκδεδωκότα, καὶ ἀνδρείως κατὰ τῶν τοῦ σώματος ἐπιθυμιῶν ἀγωνιζόμενον, ἢ ὡς ἐπιθυμοῦντα γινῶναι, καὶ μαθεῖν ἐφιέμενον τὰ τῷ λαῷ συμβησόμενα, ἢ ὅτι ἐράσμιός ἐστι καὶ λίαν ἐπέραστος, τὰς τῆς ἀρετῆς μαρμαρυγὰς ἀφιεῖς. Οὕτω διεγείρας τὸν προφήτην ὁ θεὸς ἀρχάγγελος εἰς τὴν τῶν ῥηθησομένων κατανόησιν, τὴν διδασκαλίαν προσφέρει.

Μετὰ δὲ

He spoke to me thus, Daniel, I have come at this time to impart understanding to you. At the beginning of your prayer a statement was issued, and I have come to tell you that you are a man of desires. Consider what is in the word and understand what is in the vision (vv. 22–23): as soon as you began to pray, the Lord of all accepted your supplication, perceived your laudable desire, and sent me to convey the future to you. For your part, give precise attention to what is said; what will be said is too profound for a human being (the meaning of understand what is in the vision), that is, what will be said is in riddles, | and requires of you precise attention for grasping it. Now, riddles occur when divine realities are spoken and written, the purpose being to prevent what is revealed to the holy ones becoming clear to everyone; after all, familiarity breeds contempt. He refers to him as a man of desires in the sense either as one given to fasting and hardship in a noble struggle against the desires of the flesh, or as one desiring to know and longing to discover what would happen to the people, or because he is beloved and very desirable in emitting flashes of virtue.²⁰⁷

1469

Having thus stimulated the prophet to a grasp of what would be said, he offers the instruction. Seventy weeks have been determined for your people and for your holy city for the fault to grow old, the sin to be finished, the sin to be sealed, the iniquities to be wiped out, the wrong to be forgiven, to introduce eternal righteousness, to seal vision and prophet, and to anoint the holy of holies (v. 24). It should be noted before everything else that the prophet in his prayer to God said of the people and Jerusalem your people, your city, your sanctuary. In reply God says to Daniel, Seventy weeks have been determined for your people and for your holy city, as though not according the name “his people” to the people formerly called “his,” nor indeed the city likewise formerly named as “his.” He did this also in the case of the great Moses: when they acquired the calf and paid it divine reverence, God said to the prophet, “Hurry, descend from here quickly, your people whom you led out of Egypt have sinned.”²⁰⁸ Accordingly God tells him through the archangel, I have accepted your request, and I shall allow Jerusalem to be rebuilt and bid your people to be granted return; but after the rebuilding of Jerusalem a further 490 years of living according to the law will be required. This, you see, is the extent of the seventy weeks, each day being taken as a year: since he had set a period of seventy years for their captivity, he set the period of living according to the law by multiplying that period by seven, saying Seventy weeks have been determined—that is, thought fit and decided (the version of some translators)²⁰⁹—for your people and for your holy city | for the fault to grow old and the sin to be finished—that is, for the impious crime to reach its peak and the sin to come to an end. 1472

Now, he speaks of sin finishing and fault growing old, or reaching its peak and going to extremes, in reference to the crime of crucifixion of the Lord: before this they paid the penalty for committing countless crimes and were called to account for what they were guilty of, but in turn they were vouchsafed lovingkindness and enjoyed pardon. After their frenzy against the Lord and the crime of crucifixion, however, they were granted no recall, as the events themselves bruit abroad; instead, after the passage of more than 440 years they have continued to be the world's vagrants and migrants.²¹⁰ This is the reason the holy archangel says to blessed Daniel, Seventy weeks have been determined for your people and your holy city for the fault to grow old and the sin finished. Since Christ the Lord would grant the forgiveness of sins to those believing in him, as blessed John also cried aloud in the words, “Behold the lamb of God who takes away the sin the world,”²¹¹ logically he proceeded, for the sin to be sealed, the iniquities wiped out and the wrong forgiven. In fact, he wiped out the iniquities of those believing in him by canceling the bill against us of which blessed Paul speaks.²¹² He sealed the sins by bringing to an end the way of life

²⁰⁹ Namely, the LXX in the latter case, κρίνειν the verb in question.

according to the law, on the one hand, and on the other by granting the grace of the Spirit, with the help of which those living a spiritual way of life prevail over the passions.

Further to this, and to introduce eternal righteousness. Now, Christ the Lord is properly eternal righteousness in person: of him blessed Paul says, “Wisdom has been given us from God, righteousness and sanctification and redemption;” and in writing to the Romans he said of the gospel, “God’s righteousness is revealed in it.”²¹³ And since in a display of generosity he granted righteousness as the source of eternal life to those believing in him, and bade them ask for it in prayer, “Ask for the kingdom of God and his righteousness,”²¹⁴ consequently the holy Gabriel said, for introducing eternal righteousness. He went on, for sealing vision and prophet, that is, for bringing to fulfillment all prophecies, “Christ being the end of the law to the justification of every believer,”²¹⁵ and from now on withdrawing the charism of inspiration on the part of the nation of the Jews. After all, if Christ the Lord had not come, worked and suffered, the truth of the prophets would not have been demonstrated; | so he fulfills, and as it were seals and confirms, what was foretold by the prophets, doing and suffering everything foretold by them. He continues further in this vein, and for anointing the holy of holies. Now, what is this holy of holies? Let Jews tell us; but if they do not know, let them learn from us that it is Christ the Lord, who foretells in Isaiah, “The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, hence the Lord anointed me.” Testimony is given to him by David to the effect that “he loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and hence he was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows.”²¹⁶ Blessed Peter, head of the apostles, also gives testimony in the words, “Jesus of Nazareth, whom God anointed with the Holy Spirit and with power, and who went about doing good and healing all those under the power of the devil, because God was with him.”²¹⁷

Blessed Daniel the prophet, accordingly, teaches that God decided that a period of 490 years should be allotted to Jerusalem to enjoy divine gifts as usual until it committed that sacrilegious and fearsome crime²¹⁸—I mean, the crucifixion of the Savior, who is known as holy of holies for his being the fount of holiness, and who is anointed in his humanity by the Holy Spirit, and seals and confirms the ancient prophecies by fulfilling everything foretold by them, and grants forgiveness of sins to those who believe in him.

The divine archangel then explains at what point calculation of the seventy weeks should begin. You will know and understand, from the issuing of the words about response and building of Jerusalem until an anointed leader, seven weeks and sixty-two weeks (v. 25). Some commentators, then, suppose that the beginning of rebuilding that happened under Cyrus is the beginning of the number of weeks. Others, however, begin the count from the sixth year of the reign of Darius son of Hystaspes when the rebuilding of the temple came to its due end with the raising of obstacles to rebuilding halfway through by neighboring peoples on account of hostility to Jews, Cambyses son of Cyrus being hoodwinked by them and forbidding the rebuilding.²¹⁹ But neither of these is true: firstly, a greater number of years would be arrived at if you wanted to count from that point; next, it is not possible to find a cancellation of sins occurring in the case of anyone else, or forgiveness of wrongs, gift of eternal righteousness, fulfillment of prophetic oracles or anointing of a holy of holies other than Christ the Lord. |

If this is so, however, and those who want the number of weeks to be calculated that way are in agreement, let the 490 years be calculated in reverse. You see, if we were to begin counting from the appearance of our Lord and Savior at the Jordan when he commenced preaching and teaching and wonder-working, and go backwards, we would find the number fails to reach Darius, let ἀριθμόν, ἀλλὰ τῷ εἰκοστῷ ἔτει τῆς Ἀρταξέρξου τοῦ Ξέρξου βασιλείας συμπληρούμενον, καθ' ὃν καιρὸν ὁ Νεεμίας, οἰνοχόος ὢν τοῦδε τοῦ βασιλέως, ζῆλον λαβὼν, καὶ τὸν Θεὸν ἀντιβολήσας, καὶ τῆς ἄνωθεν ἀπολαύσας ῥοπῆς, ἰκετεύει μὲν τὸν βασιλέα ἐπιτρέψαι αὐτῷ τὴν τῶν περιβόλων τῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ οἰκοδομίαν, τυχὼν δὲ εὐμενοῦς τοῦ βασιλέως, καταλαμβάνει μὲν τὴν πατρίδα, σὺν πάσῃ δὲ προθυμίᾳ καὶ τὰ λείποντα τῷ θεῷ προστίθῃσι νεῶ· ἀνίστησι δὲ καὶ τὰ τῆς πόλεως τεῖχη, καὶ πύργοις πάντοθεν ὀχυρώσας ἐπιτίθῃσι τὰς πύλας, καὶ προτρέψας τοὺς ἱερέας, ἔρημον οὖσαν τῶν οἰκητόρων τὴν πόλιν, πλήρη τῶν ἐνοικούντων ποιεῖ. alone Cyrus, expiring in the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes son of Xerxes.²²⁰ It was the time when Nehemiah, cupbearer of this king, filled with zeal, implored God and received grace from on high; he besought the king to allow him to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, and finding favor with the king he returned to his homeland, and with complete enthusiasm restored what was lacking to the divine temple. He also rebuilt the city walls, fortified them with towers at all points, and inserted gates, instructing the priests and making the city, which was bereft of inhabitants, full of residents.²²¹

In a reference to this the divine archangel also said, You will know and understand from the issuing of the words to respond and rebuild Jerusalem until an anointed leader seven weeks and sixty-two weeks. It will return, its streets and walls will be rebuilt, and the times will be renewed: beginning the calculation from the rebuilding of the city, which recovered its walls and received a great number of inhabitants so as to become extended on account of the vast number of residents, you would find six weeks and sixty-two weeks up to an anointed leader. Now, it gave Christ a second name as leader after naming him holy of holies, as blessed Peter said in addressing Jews, “You killed the author of life, but God raised him from the dead, relieving the pains of death.”²²² He is our leader in his humanity as “the firstborn of all creation”—that is, a new creation: “If anyone is in Christ, there is a new creation”—and as firstborn from the dead, so as to have, as Paul says, “first place in everything.”²²³ Hence holy Gabriel called him Christ the leader. To him from the rebuilding of Jerusalem, therefore, are seven weeks and sixty-two weeks.

²²⁰ Is Theodoret arguing that if we take the 483 years (“seven weeks and sixty-two weeks” of years) back from Jesus’ baptism, we arrive at the twentieth year of Artaxerxes (I), i.e., the year 446? This would be correct mathematically if (omitting the error of about six years in our calendar introduced by Dionysius Exiguus in the sixth century) Jesus is thirty-two years of age at his baptism (Luke 3:23 says “about thirty”). Or is this to fall into the same temptation to take numbers at face value as Theodoret? In any case, modern versions divide the text after “seven weeks,” leaving the “sixty-two weeks” for the next stage of the distribution of the original seventy weeks.

²²¹ Cf. Neh 2–4.

Now, in case some people suspect we are talking stuff and nonsense, come now, let us cite the actual number of the years. From the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes son of Xerxes, when Nehemiah arrived in Jerusalem and began to raise the walls | of the city, to Darius son of Arsamus, who was slain and the empire of the Persians overthrown by Alexander the Macedonian, is a 114 years.²²⁴ From the sixth year of Alexander, when Darius was slain, to Gaius Julius Caesar, first emperor of the Romans, 282 years, including all the empire of the Macedonians. From the rule of Julius Caesar until the fifteenth year of Tiberius Caesar, when John the Baptist went to the Jordan preaching a baptism of repentance and crying aloud, “Behold the lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world,”²²⁵ seventy-three years. Altogether that makes 469, but in Hebrew years 483, which is the total of seven weeks and sixty-two weeks. One should be aware, you see, that Hebrew people calculate the year by the cycle of the moon, and thus dispense with an extra eleven days, which we call intercalary, the cycle of the moon being completed in twenty-nine days six hours. Calculating in this fashion they come up with a year of 354 days.²²⁶ Since, then, the holy archangel, in speaking to blessed Daniel, a Hebrew man, and informing him of the number of the years, cited the number in quite usual fashion, the need consequently remains to add the years amassed from the intercalary days; when these are added,

²²³ Col 1:5; 2 Cor 5:17; Col 1:18.

²²⁶ More important, the difference in years is fourteen and a half (5,313 days)—which bridges the gap between those 469 years (Artaxerxes to Jesus) and the 483 (“seven weeks and sixty-two weeks”)—as long as the symbolic value of numbers is overlooked. (Theodoret, typically, acquaints his readers with the Jews’ use in later times of a Babylonian system for their ecclesiastical calendar based on the cycle of the moon, an intercalary month thus being required every five years—as the “holy archangel” knew, of course, he adds.)

you will find 483 years, a number equivalent to the seven weeks and sixty-two weeks.

Now, far from his making this division without purpose, it was to foretell the development in certain events: from the rebuilding of Jerusalem, which happened in the time of Nehemiah and Ezra, to Hyrcanus, the last high priest of the Hasmoneans, whom Herod slew, the number of sixty-two weeks is arrived at; and from his murder to the coming of our Savior and his arrival at the Jordan the remaining seven weeks reach their completion.²²⁷ Now, in this period—after the killing of Hyrcanus, I mean, until the coming of our Savior—high priests were appointed illegally: though the law required that high priests serve for life and be succeeded only on their death, Herod and the Romans after him put the office of high priest up for sale and were responsible for a rapid succession, and appointed some as high priest who were not even from the priestly family. Relating this the Hebrew historian Josephus says, “On being appointed king by the Romans, Herod no longer installed as high priests those of the Hasmonean family, known as Maccabean, but some who were undistinguished, their only claim being Hebrew nationality”; and | shortly after he speaks in similar terms, “His son Archelaus imitated Herod in the appointment of high priests of the Jews, and as did also the Romans after him when they came to power”; and elsewhere, “Valerius Gratus, a Roman general, brought the priesthood of Annas to an end, and appointed as high priest Ishmael son of Phiabi; not long afterwards he replaced him and installed as high priest Eleazar son of Annas the high priest, and after the passage of a year he relieved him and handed the office of high priest to Simon son of Camith. He enjoyed the office for no more than a year when Joseph, also called Caiaphas, succeeded him.”²²⁸ Blessed Luke also informs us of this, “In the fifteenth year of Tiberius Caesar, when Annas and Caiaphas were high priests” (though we never heard of two high priests serving together according to the law).²²⁹

Foretelling this the holy Gabriel says, And after the sixty-two weeks, anointing will be destroyed, and judgment is not in him (v. 26). So it is clear that he placed the sixty-two weeks first, and after them the seven in which anointing will be abolished, that is, the grace flourishing in the high priests.²³⁰ And since those appointed illegally were called high priests, he was right to proceed, And judgment is not in him: if they are anointed, but not anointed in accordance with the law, they take it upon themselves to act illegally. Above he had made it clear that he placed the seven weeks last, until an anointed leader seven weeks and sixty-two weeks: the seven weeks until Christ the leader multiplied many times he put in his very memory for us to know that if we wish to calculate from Christ and go backwards, we shall find the seven weeks first and then the sixty-two. And to make it clearer, It will return, its streets and walls will be rebuilt, and the times will be renewed, that is, the period before the rebuilding. And after the sixty-two weeks, the anointing will be destroyed. He did not say after the seven but after the sixty-two, on which the seven follow, in which the anointing will be destroyed, and there will be no judgment in him, Herod being a foreign king, from Ashkelon on his father's side,²³¹ Idumean on his mother's, and the so-called high priests not anointed according to the law but appointed by the foreign rulers Herod, Archelaus, and the Roman | prefects.

He then mentions the ruin which would overtake the city, this foreign kingdom itself, and the illegal high priesthood, saying, And he will destroy the city and the holy place along with the leader who is to come: the city will be overthrown, and the holy temple will undergo complete destruction.²³² The city will suffer this along with the leader who is to come, that is, those illegal rulers who are to come; by the leader who is to come he referred to the foreign kingdom and illegal high priest. Then, to bring out that they will suffer far worse troubles than before, he went on, They will be cut down as in a flood, that is, they will meet with ruin such as people of old met with when the flood overwhelmed the whole earth.²³³ And to bring out that they will be granted no recall or relief, And to the end of war assigned with desolations: they will meet with utter desolation, consigned to war as though to some flood, succumbing finally to these troubles and never gaining any recall.

²²⁹ Luke 3:1–2. Theodoret is right to query this coupling of Caiaphas and his father-in-law in the position; Joseph Fitzmyer remarks, “Since there was never more than one high priest at a time, the phrase raises a question again about either the accuracy of Luke’s information or of his interpretations. On the other hand, it may have been customary to speak of an ex-high priest as such even when he was already out of office” (The Gospel according to Luke I–IX [AB 28; Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1981], 458).

²³⁰ Theodoret’s text gives a rendering of “anointing” for Hebrew “an anointed one,” which seems to refer to the high priest Onias III murdered in 171. He proceeds to rationalize the text, which is at odds with the Hebrew.

Having thus made predictions of the Jews' ruin, he returns to the number of seventy weeks, supplying the one missing after the sixty-nine. One week will confirm a covenant of one week for many people, and in half a week sacrifice and libation will cease; an abomination of desolation on the temple, and to the consummation of time a consummation will be given to the desolation (v. 27): I have foretold what will occur in the seven weeks after the sixty-two weeks; but there is need to learn as well what will happen in the other week. In fact, the new covenant will be given to the believers in this week, and he will fill them with all power: in the middle of this week sacrifice and libation will cease: sacrifice according to the law will come to an end when the true sacrifice of the innocent lamb, who takes away the sin of the world, is offered; when it is finally offered, the other will cease. Hence, once the sacrifice was accomplished and our Savior sent the Spirit, "the veil of the temple was torn from top to bottom,"²³⁴ causing the previously unseen realities to be visible to all, and making accessible what was untouchable and inaccessible. Since, you see, the veil separated from the holy ones the holy of holies that contained the mercy seat, the cherubim, and the ark, the complete tearing of the veil demonstrated in actual fact that grace, which had resided there, departed, and what was accessible only to the high priest became available to all. Now, this | happened with the offering of the sacrifice for the whole world.

²³² The Greek obscures the author's reference to the plundering of Jerusalem by Antiochus IV.

προσενεχθείσης. Εἰ δέ τις καὶ τὸν χρόνον καταμαθεῖν ἐθέλει, ἐκ τοῦ κατὰ Ἰωάννην Εὐαγγελίου μαθήσεται. Ὡς περὶ τὰ τρία ἔτη καὶ ἡμισυ κηρύξας ὁ Κύριος, καὶ τοὺς ἁγίους αὐτοῦ μαθητὰς τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ καὶ τοῖς θαύμασι βεβαιώσας, τότε τὸ πάθος ὑπέμεινε· μετὰ δὲ τὸν σταυρὸν καὶ τὸν θάνατον, καὶ τὴν ἀνάστασιν, καὶ τὴν εἰς οὐρανούς ἀνάβασιν, καὶ τὴν τοῦ ἁγίου Πνεύματος ἐπιφοίτησιν, τὸν λοιπὸν τῆς ἐβδομάδος χρόνον οἱ ἅγιοι ἀπόστολοι ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις κηρύττοντές τε καὶ θαυματουργοῦντες, πολλὰς τε ἀνθρώπων χιλιάδας εἰς τὴν εὐαγγελικὴν ποδηγήσαντες διδασκαλίαν, τῆς Νέας Διαθήκης ἡξίωσαν καὶ τῆς τοῦ παναγίου βαπτίσματος χάριτος τυχεῖν παρεσκεύασαν. Εἴτα τῶν κατὰ τὸν ἅγιον Στέφανον ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων τολμηθέντων, διεσπάρησαν μὲν οἱ ἄλλοι κατὰ τὰς πόλεις τῆς Ἰουδαίας, οἱ δὲ θεῖοι ἀπόστολοι σμικρὸν ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις διατρίψαντες χρόνον, εἰς τὴν Σαμάρειαν καὶ Καισάρειαν, Λύδδαν τε καὶ Ἰώππην περιόντες, ἅπασιν ἀνθρώποις τὰ σωτήρια δόγματα προσφέρειν ἠπείγοντο. Τούτου χάριν ὁ θεὸς ἀρχάγγελος τῷ μακαρίῳ φησὶ Δανιήλ, ὅτι «Δυναμώσει διαθήκην πολλοῖς ἐβδομάς μία,» τὸν τε πρὸ τοῦ σταυροῦ τοῦ Κυρίου χρόνον, καὶ τὸν μετὰ τὴν ἀνάστασιν τοῦ Σωτῆρος τῶν ἁγίων ἀποστόλων ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις διδασκαλίαν κατὰ ταύτῃ συναναγαγόν. Τοῦτο δὲ πεποίηκε Πιλάτος νύκτωρ εἰς τὸν θεῖον νεὼν τὰς βασιλικὰς εἰσκομίσας εἰκόνας παρὰ τὸν θεῖον νόμον. Τοῦτο δὲ καὶ ὁ Κύριος ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς Εὐαγγελίοις τοῖς ἁγίοις αὐτοῦ

If you want to learn the time as well, you will find it in the Gospel according to John.²³⁵ When the Lord had preached for about three and a half years, and had strengthened his holy disciples with teaching and miracles, he then underwent the passion. But after the crucifixion, death, resurrection, ascension into heaven, and coming of the Holy Spirit, the holy apostles spent the rest of the week preaching in Jerusalem, working wonders and guiding many thousands to the evangelical teaching, and they imparted the new covenant and caused them to enjoy the grace of all-holy baptism. Then, when the Jews took flagrant action against holy Stephen, while the others were scattered to the cities of Judea, the divine apostles stayed for a short time in Jerusalem, visiting Samaria and Caesarea, Lydda and Joppa, and they pressed on with proposing the saving doctrines to all people. This is the reason the divine archangel said to blessed Daniel, One week will confirm a covenant for many people, including as one both the period before the crucifixion of the Lord and that of the holy apostles teaching in Jerusalem after the resurrection.²³⁶

He next divides the week in two, saying, And in half a week sacrifice and libation will cease: with the offering of the true sacrifice the shadow of the law will come to an end. And further, An abomination of desolation on the temple: as a result of this sacrifice not only will the other sacrifice cease but as well an abomination of desolation will be inflicted on the temple—that is, that formerly venerable and fearsome place will be made desolate. A sign of the desolation will be the introduction into it of certain images forbidden by the law; Pilate was guilty of this by introducing into the divine temple by night the imperial images in violation of the law.²³⁷ The Lord also in the sacred Gospels foretold to his holy ²³⁵ Theodoret's choice of John's Gospel is interesting. Admittedly, John will look for significant events at the crucifixion, such as the piercing of Jesus' side, that may evoke memories of Daniel. As for Jesus' ministry lasting for about three and a half years, Theodoret is perhaps thinking of John's mention of three Passovers during the course of Jesus' ministry.

²³⁶ Is Theodoret reduced to finding in the apostles' "week" of preaching in Jerusalem after the resurrection the "week" of v. 27? Modern commentators tend to see a reference to the years before the culmination of persecution by Antiochus, the "covenant" being the pact between him and renegade Jews.

προέλεγε μαθηταῖς· «Ὅταν ἴδῃτε τὸ βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως τὸ εἰρημένον διὰ Δανιήλ τοῦ προφήτου, γινώσκετε, ὅτι ἤγγικεν ἡ ἐρήμωσις αὐτῆς. Τότε οἱ ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ φευγέτωσαν εἰς τὰ ὄρη, καὶ ὁ ἐπὶ τοῦ δώματος μὴ καταβήτω ἅραί τι ἀπὸ τῆς οἰκίας αὐτοῦ.» Ταῦτα δὲ ἔλεγε σημαίνων τὸ τάχος τῆς καταληψομένης αὐτοὺς πανωλεθρίας. Καὶ μικρὸν δὲ πρὸ τούτων φησὶν· «Ἰερουσαλὴμ, Ἰερουσαλὴμ, ἡ ἀποκτείνουσα τοὺς προφῆτας, καὶ λιθοβολοῦσα τοὺς ἀπεσταλμένους πρὸς αὐτήν, ποσάκις ἠθέλησα ἐπισυναγαγεῖν τὰ τέκνα σου ὃν τρόπον ὄρνις ἐπισυνάγει τὰ νοσσία ἐαυτῆς ὑπὸ τὰς πτέρυγας, καὶ οὐκ ἠθελήσατε. Διὰ τοῦτο λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι ἀφίεται ὁ οἶκος ὑμῶν ἐρημος.» Ταῦτα προλέγων ὁ ἅγιος Γαβριήλ, μετὰ τὸ προθεσπίσαι τῆς κατὰ τὸν νόμον λατρείας τὴν παῦλαν, ἐπήγαγε καὶ ἐπὶ τούτοις· «Ἐπὶ τὸ ἱερὸν βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως.» Καὶ ἵνα μὴ νομίσωσιν οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι πάλιν ἀπολήψεσθαι τὸν θεῖον νεὼν τὴν προτέραν εὐπρέπειάν τε καὶ δόξαν, ἀναγκαίως ἐπήγαγε· «Καὶ ἕως συντελείας καιροῦ συντέλεια δοθήσεται ἐπὶ τὴν ἐρήμωσιν.» Ἔως γὰρ, φησί, τῆς τοῦ αἰῶνος συντελείας ἡ τῆς ἐρημώσεως συντέλεια μενεῖ, μεταβολὴν οὐ δεχομένη. Τοῦτο καὶ ὁ μακάριος ἔφη Δαβίδ· «Ἐν ὀργῇ συντελείας καὶ οὐ μὴ ὑπάρξουσιν, καὶ γνώσκονται ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς δεσπόζει τοῦ Ἰακώβ, καὶ τῶν περάτων τῆς γῆς.» Γνώσκονται δὲ ὅταν ἴδωσι τὸ σημεῖον τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ. Τότε γὰρ «κόψονται κατὰ φυλάς, τότε ὄψονται εἰς ὃν ἐξεκέντησαν.» Εἰ δ' οὐχ οὕτως ταῦτα ἔχει, ἐπειδὴ ὁ τῶν τετρακοσίων καὶ ἐννεήκοντα ἐτῶν διελήλυθεν ἀριθμὸς, καὶ ἕτερα δὲ πρὸς τούτοις πλεόν ἢ τεσσαράκοντα καὶ τετρακόσια, δειξάτωσαν ἐπὶ τίνων ἔλαβε πέρας ἡ τοῦ ἀρχαγγέλου χρησιμολογία. disciples, “When you see the abomination of desolation mentioned in Daniel the prophet, realize that its desolation is at hand. Then is the time for those in Judea to flee to the mountains, and the one on the rooftop not to go down to take something from his house.” He said this to highlight the rapidity of the disaster about to overtake them. And a little before this he says, “Jerusalem, Jerusalem, you who kill the prophets and stone those sent to it, how many times have I wanted to gather together your children in the way a bird gathers together its young under its wings, and you refused. | 1485 Hence I say to you, your house will be left desolate.”²³⁸ Foretelling this, the holy Gabriel, after prophesying the end of the worship according to the law, went on further, On the temple an abomination of desolation.

In case the Jews should think the divine temple would recover its former splendor and glory, he consequently added, And to the consummation of time a consummation will be given to the desolation: until the end of the age the consummation of the desolation will continue, undergoing no change. Blessed David also said as much, “In fury of consummation, and they are not to survive, and they will know that God is lord of Jacob and of the bounds of the earth.”²³⁹ They will know when they see the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: then they will mourn tribe by tribe, then they will look on him whom they have pierced.²⁴⁰ But if this is not the case, since the number of 490 years has passed, plus more than another 440,²⁴¹ let them demonstrate in whose time the archangel’s ora-

it to the desecration of the temple in 167 by Antiochus, the usual interpretation of “abomination of desolation” (see note 188 for the derivation of the term).

²³⁸ Matt 24:14–17; 23:37–38. The reader should note that Jesus declares Daniel to be a “prophet,” which doubtless confirmed Daniel’s place among the prophets for Theodoret.

²³⁹ Ps 59:13. In later commentary on the psalm Theodoret will take the verse to refer to such deplorable developments as the action of Gaius Caligula in erecting a statue of himself in the temple on becoming emperor in 37, Nero’s commissioning Vespasian to pacify Judea, and the sacking of Jerusalem by Titus under Vespasian in 70.

α'. «Ἐν ἔτει τρίτῳ Κύρου, τοῦ βασιλέως Περσῶν, λόγος ἀπεκαλύφθη τῷ Δανιήλ, οὗ τὸ ὄνομα ἐπεκλήθη Βαλτάσαρ.» Τισὶ δοκεῖ τὸν χρόνον ἐσφάλλαι, καὶ ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐν ἔτει πρώτῳ, τρίτῳ θεῖναι τὸν ἐξ ἀρχῆς τὸ βιβλίον γράψαντα· τούτου δὲ τεκμήριον, ἐκ τοῦ τὸν μακάριον εἰπεῖν Δανιήλ, εὐθὺς μετὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς προφητείας· «Καὶ ἐγένετο Δανιήλ ἕως ἔτους ἑνὸς Κύρου τοῦ βασιλέως.» Εἰ γὰρ μέχρι τοῦ ἔτους μόνον τοῦ πρώτου τῆς Κύρου βασιλείας διήρκεσε, φησὶν, ὁ προφήτης, πῶς ἐν cle was fulfilled. In the time of the Maccabees? There were not 490 years from Darius to them, nor from Cyrus, the first to rule over the Persians: from Cyrus to Antiochus Epiphanes, in whose time in their zeal the Maccabees took control of affairs, is about 372 years.²⁴² In particular, which of the latter was called holy of holies? Judas, or Jonathan, Simon, or the one after them? Actually, not even Abraham the patriarch, not even Moses the lawgiver, not even Elijah the greatest of the prophets was ever given the name holy of holies.

Both the timing, therefore, and the titles clearly foretell to us the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Believing in him and looking forward to his second coming, let us pray to receive lovingkindness from him on the day of decision. May it be the good fortune of us all to attain this, thanks to the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit be glory, for ages of ages. Amen.

CHAPTER 10

In the third year of Cyrus king of the Persians a word was revealed to Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar (v. 1). Some think the date is wrong, and that the original scribe put “third” instead of “first” year. Evidence for this comes from blessed Daniel’s saying right after the beginning of the work, “Daniel was there for one year of King Cyrus”;²⁴³ after all, if the prophet had lasted only to the first Daniel’s time in the court of “Darius son of Xerxes”?

²⁴² If Theodoret has in mind the response of the Maccabees to Antiochus’s desecration of the temple in 167, it is a date 539 he is thinking of in Cyrus’s reign. He is obviously aware of the alternative view that the book derives from the Maccabean period, but in his ignorance of the nature of apocalyptic he continues to insist the work is prospective prophecy.

τῷ τρίτῳ ἔτει τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν βλέπει; Ἐγὼ δὲ ἡγοῦμαι οὐ ῥητὸν χρόνον τὸ πρότερον σημάναι, οὐδὲ τῷ πρώτῳ ἔτει τῆς Κύρου βασιλείας τὴν τοῦ μακαρίου Δανιὴλ περιορίσαι ζώην. Οὐδὲ γὰρ εἶπεν, Ἔως πρώτου ἔτους Κύρου τοῦ βασιλέως, ἀλλ' «ἕως ἔτους ἐνός.» Βούλεται δέ, ὡς ἐμοί γε δοκεῖ, διδάξαι τοὺς ἐντυγχάνοντας τῇ προφητικῇ συγγραφῇ, ὅτι δὴ καὶ μέχρι Κύρου, τοῦ βασιλέως Περσῶν, διήρκεσεν, ὃς καὶ τῶν δορυαλώτων Ἰουδαίων τοὺς βουλομένους ἐλευθέρους ἀποφήνας, προσέταξεν εἰς τὴν ἐνεγκοῦσαν ἐπανελθεῖν, καὶ τὸν θεῖον ἀνεγεῖραι νεών. Τοῦτο δὲ σαφῶς ἡμᾶς διδάσκει καὶ ὁ ἅγιος ἄγγελος τῷ Δανιὴλ μετὰ βραχέα διαλεγόμενος· φησὶ γάρ· «Καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν ἔτει πρώτῳ Κύρου, ἔστην εἰς κράτος καὶ ἰσχύν.» ἀντὶ τοῦ· Εὐθὺς τοῦ Κύρου βασιλεύσαντος, πάντα πραγματευόμενος διετέλουν, ὥστε τῆς αἰχμαλωσίας τὸν λαὸν ἀπαλλάξαι. Καὶ ἐν τῷ τέλει δὲ τοῦ βιβλίου· Παρέλαβε, φησί, Κύρος ὁ Πέρσης τὴν βασιλείαν, καὶ ἦν Δανιὴλ συμβιωτὴς τοῦ βασιλέως, καὶ ἐνδοξος ὑπὲρ πάντας τοὺς φίλους αὐτοῦ· ὥστε πάντοθεν δείκνυσθαι τοῦ τρίτου ἔτους τὸν ἀριθμόν. «Ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ τοίνυν ἔτει τῆς Κύρου βασιλείας, ὁ λόγος ἀπεκαλύφθη τῷ Δανιὴλ, οὗ τὸ ὄνομα ἐπεκλήθη Βαλτάσαρ. Καὶ ἀληθινὸς ὁ λόγος, καὶ δύνάμεις μεγάλῃ, καὶ σύνεσις ἐδόθη αὐτῷ ἐν τῇ ὀπτασίᾳ.» Εἰκότως δὲ λόγον καὶ ὀπτασίαν καλεῖ· ἐθεάσατο μὲν γὰρ ἁγίους ἁγγέλους, ἡκουσε δὲ αὐτῶν διαλεγόμενων καὶ μεμάθηκεν ἀκριβῶς τὰ ἐσόμενα. Λέγει δὲ ἀληθῆ εἶναι τὸν λόγον, ὥστε ἀνενδοιάστως ἅπαντας τὰ ῥηθησόμενα δέξασθαι.

1489 β', γ'. «Ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ἐκείναις, ἐγὼ Δανιὴλ ἡμην πενθῶν τρεῖς ἑβδομάδας ἡμερῶν. Ἄρτον ἐπιθυμιῶν οὐκ ἔφαγον, καὶ κρέας καὶ οἶνος οὐκ εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸ στόμα μου, καὶ ἄλειμμα οὐκ ἤλειψάμην, ἕως τριῶν ἑβδομάδων ἡμερῶν.» Ἀναγκαῖον ζητῆσαι τὴν τοῦ πένθους αἰτίαν· ἀσαφῶς γὰρ αὐτὴν ἡ προφητεία διδάσκει. Πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ οὐδὲ ἐπέκειτό τις ἀθυμίας ἀφορμή· ὅ τε γὰρ βασιλεὺς ἡμερός τε καὶ φιλόανθρωπος, καὶ τὰ θεῖα τιμῶν, καὶ τοῦ Δανιὴλ τὴν φιλίαν περὶ πολλοῦ ποιούμενος, καὶ ὅλος ὁ λαὸς εἰρήνης πολλῆς διὰ τὴν τοῦ βασιλέως ἀπήλαυνεν ὑπιόθητα· μᾶλλον δέ, εἴ τις προσέχειν ἐθελήσειε τῇ τε τοῦ μακαρίου Ἰερεμίου προφητείᾳ, καὶ τῇ τῶν Παραλειπομένων ἱστορίᾳ, καὶ τῇ τοῦ Ἑσδρα συγγραφῇ, εὐρήσει τὸν Κύρον ἐν τῷ πρώτῳ ἔτει τῆς βασιλείας, ἅπασι τοῖς βουλομένοις τῶν Ἰουδαίων παρεγγυήσαντα τὴν ἐνεγκοῦσαν καταλαβεῖν, καὶ τὸν θεῖον ἀνεγεῖραι νεών, ὥστε πανταχόθεν θυμηδίας ἔχειν ἀφορμὰς τὸν προφήτην. Ἀλλὰ γὰρ εἴ τις ἀκριβῶς τούτων ἕκαστον ἐξε-

year of the reign of Cyrus, how would he have a revelation in the third year? In my view, on the other hand, the first reference does not specify a particular date, and it does not limit the life of blessed Daniel to the first year of the reign of Cyrus. He did not say, in fact, “until the first year of King Cyrus,” but “for one year.” Now, his intention in my opinion is to inform those reading the inspired work that he actually lasted until Cyrus king of the Persians, who set free those of the Jewish captives who wished it, and bade them return to their country and rebuild the divine temple. The holy archangel also clearly informs us of this in talking to Daniel shortly after, saying, “In the first year of Cyrus I rose to give power and strength”—that is, As soon as Cyrus came to the throne, I kept doing everything to free the people from captivity. And at the end of the book he says, “Cyrus the Persian took control of the kingdom, and Daniel was his companion, enjoying a greater reputation than all his friends.”²⁴⁴ Hence on all the evidence there is proof for the number the third year.

In the third year of the reign of Cyrus, then, a word was revealed to Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar. The word was true, and mighty power and understanding were given to him in the vision. He was right to speak of word and vision: he had seen holy angels, heard them speaking and gained a precise knowledge of the future. He said the word was true so that everyone without question would accept what would be said. In those days I, Daniel, had been grieving for three weeks of days. I had not eaten desirable food, | no meat or wine passed my lips, and I had not anointed myself for three weeks of days (vv. 2–3). There is need to enquire about the reason for the grief, the text’s information not being clear. Firstly, note, no cause of depression was affecting him: the king was mild and kind, respectful of divine things, appreciative of the friendship of Daniel, and the people were enjoying deep peace as a result of the king’s kindness. Rather, if you were prepared to refer to the work of blessed Jeremiah, the story of the Chronicles, and the history of Esdras, you would find Cyrus in the first year of his reign urging all the Jews who wished to occupy their homeland and rebuild the divine temple, the result being that the prophet had reason for contentment on all scores. If, however, you were in fact to exam-

τάσειεν, αὐτὰ ταῦτα εὐρήσει αἵτια τῆς τοῦ Δανιήλ ἀχθηδόνος· τοῦ γὰρ βασιλέως ἐπιτρέψαντος ἅπασιν τοῖς ἐθέλουσι τὴν ἐλευθερίαν καὶ τὴν ἐπ' ἀνόδον, οἱ μὲν πλείους οἰκίας ἐν Βαβυλῶνι δειμάμενοι, καὶ τούτων τῷ δεσμῷ κατεχόμενοι, τῆς ἐπανόδου καταφρονήσαντες, τὴν ξένην τῆς οἰκείας προσείλοντο· μόνοι δὲ οἱ τῆς εὐσεβείας ἐρασταί, καὶ τῶν πατρῶων νόμων φύλακες, τῶν ἐν Βαβυλῶνι κτημάτων καταφρονήσαντες, τὴν τῆς πατρίδος ἐρημίαν καὶ αὐτῆς τῆς βασιλείας προὔτιμηναν. Τοῦτο τοίνυν τῷ μακαρίῳ Δανιήλ μέγιστον εἰργάσατο πένθος· τῆς τε γὰρ θείας ἐπαγγελίας τὸ ἀψευδὲς ὄρων, καὶ τοῦ βασιλέως τὸ ἡμερον καὶ φιλάνθρωπον, καὶ τοῦ λαοῦ τὸ δυσπειθὲς καὶ δυσήνιον, σφόδρα τὴν ψυχὴν ἐτρύχετο, καὶ πενθῶν καὶ θρηνῶν διετέλει. Ζητήσειεν δ' ἂν τις εἰκότως, τί δήποτε τῶν ἄλλων ἔνεκεν, ὡς ἐρῶσθιμηκότων καὶ τῆς ἐπανόδου καταπεφρονηκότων, θρηνῶν καὶ ὀλοφυρόμενος, αὐτὸς οὐκ ἐπανῆλθεν εἰς τὴν πατρίδα. Εὐρήσει δὲ τὴν λύσιν, αὐτῆς τῆς αἰχμαλωσίας τὴν αἰτίαν σκοπούμενος. Ὡςπερ γὰρ οὐ διὰ τὰς οἰκείας πλημμελείας εἶασεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεὸς δορυάλωτον γενέσθαι, ἀλλὰ τῆς τοῦ λαοῦ προμηθεύμενος ὠφελείας, καὶ οἶόν τινα κηδεμόνα καὶ διδάσκαλον αὐτοῖς συμπέμπων· οὕτω καὶ ἐν τῷ τῆς ἐπανόδου καιρῷ, τῶν πλειόνων τὴν οἴκησιν τὴν ἐν Βαβυλῶνι στερεζάντων, πάλιν ὁ Θεὸς προφήτης συνδιάγειν αὐτοῖς ἀναγκάζεται, ἵνα μὴ ἔρημοι τῆς πνευματικῆς κηδεμονίας γενόμενοι εἰς ἀσέβειαν παντελῶς ἐξωκείλωσι. Τούτου χάριν, καὶ βασιλέως τὴν εὐσέβειαν τιμῶντος τοῦ τηνικάδε κρατοῦντος, καὶ πᾶσαν αὐτῷ θεραπείαν προσφέροντος, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων προτιμῶντος ἀπάντων, οὐδεμίαν ὁ μακάριος Δανιήλ λαμβάνει παρὰ ψυχὴν, ἀλλ' ἀνιᾶ καὶ λίαν αὐτὸν ἀλγύνει τοῦ λαοῦ τὸ δυσπειθές, καὶ ἡ τῆς ἀγίας πόλεως λήθη. Οὐ χάριν καὶ τρεῖς ἐβδομάδας ἄσιτος διετέλεσεν· «Ἄρτον γὰρ, φησί, ἐπιθυμιῶν οὐκ ἔφαγον, καὶ κρέας καὶ οἶνος οὐκ εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸ στόμα μου, καὶ ἄλειμμα οὐκ ἠλειψάμην ἕως τριῶν ἡμερῶν | ἐβδομάδων.» Οὐδεμίαν γὰρ, φησὶν, ἐπιμέλειαν ἐν πάσαις ταύταις ταῖς ἡμέραις τῷ σώματι προσενήνοχα, οὐκ ἀλοιφὴν ἔξωθεν, οὐ τροφήν ἔνδοθεν. Καλῶς δὲ καὶ μάλα προσφόρως οὐκ ἐπὶ τῶν κρεῶν, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τοῦ ἄρτου, τὸ τῶν ἐπιθυμιῶν προστέθεικεν. Ὁ γὰρ ἄρτος ἀναγκαία πάντων τροφή· κρεῶν γὰρ ἀπολαύουσιν οἱ εὐπορώτεροι, ἄρτου δὲ πρὸς τοῖς εὐπορωτέροις καὶ οἱ πενέστεροι. Διὰ τοῦτο τὸν ἄρτον ἐπιθυμιῶν προσηγόρευεν, ὡς καὶ κοινὴν ὄντα τροφήν, καὶ πάσης τροφῆς ἐρασμιώτατον.

ine each of these texts precisely, you would find these same factors responsible for Daniel's unease: with the king allowing freedom and return to everyone interested, some people who built bigger houses in Babylon were held in bondage by them and scorned the offer of return, preferring a foreign to a native home, while only religious devotees and observers of the ancestral laws, who scorned a stake in Babylon, preferred the desolation of their homeland even to the palace itself.

This it was, then, that caused blessed Daniel greatest grief: he saw the reliability of the divine promise, the king's mild and kindly manner, and the people's intractable and froward nature, and he was distressed in soul and kept grieving and mourning. You would be right, on the other hand, to enquire why on earth he was weeping and wailing for those others who were uninterested and scornful of returning, yet did not return to his homeland himself. Now, you would find the solution by considering the cause of the captivity itself. You see, just as it was not for his own failings that God allowed him to be taken prisoner, but out of concern for the people's benefit, sending him to accompany them like some carer and teacher, so too at the time of return, when most were happy with residence in Babylon, once more the divine prophet is obliged to share their life lest they be deprived of spiritual care and hurtle head over heels into godlessness. This is the reason why, with a king on the throne at the time who esteemed religion, provided him with every attention, and elevated him above everyone else, blessed Daniel takes no comfort, but is sore distressed and uneasy at the people's intractable attitude and forgetfulness of the holy city.

Hence he kept fasting even for three weeks: I had not eaten desirable bread, no meat or wine passed my lips, and I had not anointed myself for three weeks of days: | I paid my body no attention in all these days with anointing on the outside or food within. Now, it was right and proper for him to attach the word desirable not to meat but to bread: bread is essential nourishment for everyone, the more affluent treating themselves to meat whereas the needy have bread as well as the more affluent. This is the reason for his giving it the term desirable bread, since it was nourishment for everyone alike and more sought after than any other food.

δ'. «Καὶ ἐν ἡμέρᾳ εἰκάδι καὶ τετάρτῃ τοῦ μηνὸς τοῦ πρώτου, ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ ἔτει, ἐγὼ ἡμὴν ἐχόμενα τοῦ ποταμοῦ τοῦ μεγάλου, αὐτός ἐστι Τίγρις.» Ἐπισημῆνασθαι δεῖ καὶ τὸν μῆνα, καὶ τὰς τῆς νηστείας ἡμέρας, εἰς ἔλεγχον τῆς Ἰουδαίων παρανομίας. Τῇ γὰρ τεσσαρεσκαίδεκάτῃ τοῦ πρώτου μηνὸς πρὸς ἐσπέραν τοῦ θείου νόμου προστάττοντος ἐπιτελεῖν τὸ Πάσχα, ὁ μακάριος Δανιὴλ μέχρι τῆς τετάρτης εἰκάδος ἄσιτος διετέλει. Εἰ δὲ εἴποιεν οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι, ὅτι ἄρτον ἐπιθυμιῶν οὐκ ἔφαγεν, ἅτε δὴ ἄρτους ἄζυμους ἐσθίων· πρῶτον μὲν τὴν οἰκείαν ἄνοιαν καὶ διὰ τούτων ἐλέγχουσιν· ἄρτος γὰρ καλεῖται καὶ ὁ ζυμίτης, καὶ ὁ ἄζυμος. Ἐπειτα δὲ τὰ ἐπαγόμενα ἀντικρὺς αὐτῶν ἐμφράττει τὸ ἀναίσχυντον στόμα. «Κρέας γὰρ, φησί, καὶ οἶνος οὐκ εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸ στόμα μου.» Εἰ δὲ κρεῶν οὐ μετέλαβε, πῶς τὸ Πάσχα ἐπετέλεσεν; Τὸ γὰρ Πάσχα οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἢ ἄμνός τις ἄρσῃ ἐνιανυσιαῖος, ἄμωμος, πρὸς ἐσπέραν θυόμενος καὶ ὀπτώμενος. Ὁ τοίνυν κρεῶν μὴ μεταλαβὼν, πῶς τὸ Πάσχα ἐπετέλει; Οὐκοῦν οὐκ ἐπετέλεσε τὸ Πάσχα τῷ νόμῳ πειθόμενος, ὃς διαρρήδην παρακελεύεται τὰς τρεῖς ἐπιτελεῖν ἐορτὰς εἰς τὸν τόπον, ὃν ἂν ἐκλέξηται Κύριος ὁ Θεός. Ἐναργῶς τοίνυν παρανομοῦσιν οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι ταύτας ἐν τῇ ξένῃ τολμῶντες ἐπιτελεῖν. Ἡμεῖς δὲ ἐπὶ τὸ προκείμενον ἐπανέλθωμεν. «Τῇ τετάρτῃ, φησί, καὶ εἰκάδι τοῦ πρώτου μηνός, ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ ἔτει, ἐγὼ ἡμὴν ἐχόμενα τοῦ ποταμοῦ τοῦ μεγάλου, αὐτός ἐστι Τίγρις.» Πάλιν καὶ ἐντεῦθεν διδασκόμεθα, ὥς οὐκ ἔσφαλται ὁ χρόνος· καὶ γὰρ ἐνταῦθα τῷ τρίτῳ ἔτει, ἀλλ' οὐ τῷ πρώτῳ ἔφη τὴν ὀπτασίαν ἐωρακέναι.

ε', ζ'. «Καὶ ἦρα τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς μου, καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ ἀνὴρ ἐνδεδυμένος βαδδεῖμ, καὶ ἡ ὀσφὺς αὐτοῦ περιεζωσμένη χρυσίῳ Ὠφάζ. Καὶ τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ ὥσει Θαρσεῖς.» Βαδδεῖμ δὲ τῇ Ἑλλάδι φωνῇ τὰ βύσσινον σημαίνεται. Λέγει τοίνυν τὸ μὲν ἔνδυμα τοῦ ὀφθέντος βύσσινον τεθεῶσθαι, τὴν δὲ ζώνην ἐκ χρυσοῦ Ὠφάζ, τουτέστι, χρυσοῦ λαμπροτάτου καὶ καθαρωτάτου· «τὸ δὲ σῶμα αὐτοῦ ὥσει Θαρσεῖς» ἀντὶ τοῦ, ἐφ' ᾧ τῷ δοκιμωτάτῳ χρυσίῳ ἐκ Θαρσεῖς φερόμενῳ· καὶ γὰρ τῷ Σολομῶντι ἐκεῖθεν τὸ ἄπε|φθον ἐκομίζετο χρυσίον. «Καὶ τὸ πρόσωπον δὲ αὐτοῦ,

On the twenty-fourth day of the first month in the third year, I was by the great river, the Tigris (v. 4).²⁴⁵ Note should be taken both of the month and of the days of fasting for proof of the Jews' lawlessness: while the divine law required Passover to be celebrated on the evening of the fourteenth day of the first month,²⁴⁶ blessed Daniel continued his fasting until the twenty-fourth. Now, if the Jews claim he did not eat desirable bread because he was eating unleavened bread, they firstly convict themselves even by this of their own stupidity, both "leavened" and "unleavened" being referred to as bread, after all. Next, what follows obviously shuts their shameless mouth, no meat or wine passed my lips; but if he tasted no meat, how did he celebrate Passover? Passover, remember, involves nothing other than a male lamb of one year, without flaw, sacrificed and roasted toward evening. Since, therefore, he did not eat meat, how was he celebrating Passover? So he could not have been celebrating Passover in obedience to the law, which clearly requires celebration of the three feast-days in the place which the Lord God chose. Those Jews, therefore, who dared to observe the days in a foreign land were breaking the law.

Let us, however, return to the theme. On the twenty-first day of the first month of the third year I was by the great river, the Tigris. We learn from this as well that the date is not wrong: he says he had the vision in the third year and not in the first. I raised my eyes, and saw a man clothed in baddeim, with a belt of gold from Uphaz around his loins. His body was like tharsis (vv. 5–6). In Greek baddeim means fine linen; so he is saying that he noticed that the clothing of the one he saw was of fine linen, and his belt of the gold of Uphaz, that is, the purest and most resplendent gold.²⁴⁷ His body was like tharsis, that is, it resembled most precious gold brought from Tharsis; Solomon, remember, brought refined gold from there.²⁴⁸ | His face had the appearance of lightning: beams like

²⁴⁶ Cf. Exod 12:1–9; we noted above Theodoret's knowledge of Jewish ritual and institutions.

²⁴⁷ Elements of the description are borrowed from similar visions in Ezek 1 and 9, where Hebrew baddim is also found. But Theodoret, who will treat of Ezekiel in his next work, is not registering the similarities. Jer 10:9, on the other hand, speaks of "silver from Tarshish and gold from Uphaz."

²⁴⁸ 1 Kgs 10:22, e.g., does speak of Solomon bringing gold from Tharsis. Perhaps a more apposite citation might have been Ezek 1:16 in the vision light streamed from his face. His eyes like burning lamps, his arms and legs like a glimpse of shining bronze, and the sound of his words like the sound of a multitude: he had eyes that were emitting fire, and arms like the most beautiful bronze; you would think you were hearing a mighty crowd talking.

I, Daniel, alone had the vision; the men with me did not have the vision, though a great trance came upon them, and they fled in fear (v. 7). Perhaps you might ask, Why on earth did they flee, not having had the vision? This fact probably instilled greater fear into them: though seeing nothing, they heard a loud voice, and they ran off terrified.²⁴⁹ Now, by trance here he refers not to fear alone but also to the invisibility; it was like what happened in the case of blessed Paul on the road near Damascus: there he saw a light flashing around him, whereas his companions saw nothing, hearing only the voice. So here likewise the companions of the divine prophet flee, hearing only the voice, and he remains alone. I was left by myself, and had this marvelous vision; my strength left me, my appearance underwent a change, and I retained no strength (v. 8): such fear came upon me from that vision that I lost the coordination of my limbs, my bodily complexion changed, and I was bereft of all strength. I heard the sound of his words, and on hearing it I registered astonishment in my face, and my face was on the ground (v. 9): as soon as I heard that loud voice, I fell prostrate; unable to bear the fearsome sight, I put my face to the ground.

And, lo, a hand touched me, raised me up to my knees and set me on the flat of my hands (v. 10): in this posture I felt something like a hand touching me and raising me up. For my part I was crawling on hands and knees, fear having loosed my joints, and I kept trying to get up. He said to me, Daniel, man of desires, find understanding in these words I speak to you and stand up straight, because now | I have been sent to you (v. 11): attend carefully to what is said by me, lay aside your fear, and listen with understanding to what will be told you: I have been sent to inform you of this; since you have proved superior to bodily desires, and have become a lover episode, where as here Θαπείζ has the sense of “beryl”—a rare occurrence, admittedly.

ταῦτα γὰρ ἀπεστάλην διδάξαι σε· ἐπειδὴ τῶν μὲν τοῦ σώματος ἐπιθυμιῶν κρείττων ἐφάνης, ἐραστῆς δὲ ἐγένου τῶν θείων, καὶ φιλοστόργως δὲ περὶ τὸν λαὸν διακείμενος τὰ τούτῳ συμβησόμενα μαθεῖν ἐπεθύμησας. Τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ ὁ ὀφθεὶς αὐτῷ δῆλον ποιεῖ· «Ἀπὸ γὰρ τῆς πρώτης, φησὶν, ἡμέρας, ἧς ἔδωκας τὴν καρδίαν σου συνιέναι καὶ κακωθῆναι ἐναντίον Κυρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ σου, ἠκούσθησαν οἱ λόγοι σου.» τεκμήριον δὲ τούτου μέγιστον ἔχεις τὴν ἐμὴν παρουσίαν. «Ἐγὼ γὰρ ἦλθον, φησὶν, ἐν τοῖς λόγοις σου.» ἀντὶ τοῦ, Διὰ τοὺς λόγους σου, καὶ ἦν προσενήνοχας δέησιν.

of divine things, in your affection for the people you have desired to learn what will befall them.²⁵⁰ Now, he refers to him not as Belteshazzar but as Daniel, the former a Chaldean name, the latter a Hebrew one, the latter given by religious people, the former by the godless. Daniel in Greek means “judgment of God,” and consequently in fidelity to his name he proclaimed in action that God exercised a right and proper judgment in vouchsafing him the charism of inspiration, and that he made clear what would happen generations later.

While he was addressing this remark to me, I stood up trembling: while his word was sufficient to raise me up, I did not completely lay aside my fear. He said to me, Do not fear, Daniel: from the first day you gave your heart to understanding and humbling yourself before the Lord your God, your words were heard, and I have come in response to your words (v. 12). From this we learn how great is the advantage to us of voluntary self-denial: blessed Daniel denied himself by voluntary fasting and sought the Lord, and he immediately won him over and gained what he desired. The one who appeared to him, in fact, made this clear to him in saying, From the first day you gave your heart to understanding and denying yourself before the Lord your God, your words were heard, and you have my coming as the clearest sign of this, for I have come in response to your words, that is, as a result of your words and the request you made.

The leader of the kingdom of the Persians opposed me for twenty-one days (v. 13): on the very first day of your prayer your petition was accepted, and I was sent to you; but for all these days the leader of the kingdom of the Persians prevented my reaching you. And, lo, Michael, one of the chief leaders came to help me, and I left him there with the leader of the kingdom of the Persians. Blessed Moses informs us of this more clearly, “When the Most High divided nations after dispersing the children of Adam, he set boundaries of nations according to the number of God’s angels.”²⁵¹ And the Lord says to the apostles in the sacred Gospels,

²⁵⁰ Cf. the interpretation Theodoret gave this sobriquet at its occurrence at 9:23 (occurring also at 10:19). Now for the first time he informs the reader of the meaning of the Hebrew name Daniel—though modern commentators prefer a rendering “my judge is God” or “God had judged.”

²⁵¹ Deut 32:8 in this LXX form lent support to the idea in ancient Judaism that each nation had its guardian angel. Theodoret mentions also in other of his

Συμφωνεῖ δὲ τούτοις καὶ ὁ μακάριος Δανιήλ· λέγει γὰρ καὶ αὐτὸς τῆς βασιλείας Περσῶν ἄρχοντα· καὶ πάλιν μετὰ βραχέα, ἄρχοντα τῶν Ἑλλήνων, καὶ τὸν Μιχαήλ δὲ ἄρχοντα τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ ἀποκαλεῖ. “Be careful not to despise one of these little ones, because their angels each day look upon the face of my Father in heaven”;²⁵² and there are many other similar statements in the divine Scripture. So we learn from this | that while each of the angels is entrusted 1497 with the care of each of us for guarding and protecting and ridding us of the wicked demon’s wiles, the archangels were entrusted with the patronage of nations, as blessed Moses informs us. Now, blessed Daniel’s words are consistent with this: he for his part also speaks of leader of the kingdom of the Persians, and in turn shortly after leader of the Greeks, and calls Michael leader of Israel.

So since this becomes clear from one source and another, the question must be asked why on earth the leader of the Persian kingdom seemed to be opposing the one responsible for advocacy of the people. After all, it is clear to anyone that angels by nature are proof against passions and full of holiness; and you can discover from every source that they respond to the divine wishes without question. How is it, then, that the leader of the kingdom of the Persians seemed to be opposing the care of the Israelites? If, however, you were interested in gaining a precise understanding, you would find the meaning of the words: the leader of the Persians and the leader of the Greeks, that is, those entrusted with their protection and care, consequent upon their being fond of those whom they cared for, observed the lawlessness of Israel and were displeased with seeing them enjoying greater care. After all, they did not know the mystery hidden in God the creator of all things; after the incarnation of our Savior, as blessed Paul says, “God’s wisdom in its rich variety in the church was made known to the powers and authorities.”²⁵³ Unaware of this mystery, therefore, and observing God’s great providence for Israel, those entrusted with the care of the other nations were displeased on seeing in them, especially despite law and prophets and so much teaching and care, a worse attitude than in those they were tending, and clinging to worse vices. The angel in his appearance to blessed Daniel also said as much, The leader of the kingdom of the Persians opposed me for twenty-one days, that is, I kept trying to convince him all that time that they rightly deserve this care, and Michael, one of the chief leaders, also supported me; and I left him there with the leader of the kingdom of the Persians. And I have come to make you understand what will come upon your people at the end of the days because, lo, there is a vision for days (vv. 13–14): while I came to you to inform you in advance of what will happen to your people before long, Michael kept talking with the leader of the kingdom of the Persians. He did not simply say, to the leader of the Persians, | 1500

but to the leader of the kingdom of the Persians, meaning, to the one entrusted with the actual king of the Persians.

While he was speaking to me in these terms, I lowered my face to the ground and was stupefied (v. 15): on hearing that the principal angels were displeased at the care given to the people, I was once more filled with unease and stood with head bent, incapable even of looking up. And, lo, one in human form touched my lips. I addressed the one standing before me in the words, Lord, I was deeply moved by the sight of you; see, I have no strength. How will your servant, lord, be able to speak with my lord? I have grown weak, and from now on no strength will remain in me, no breath is left in me (vv. 16–17): Seeing me once more filled with anxiety, he touched my lips with a human hand, as it were, and imparted to me the power of speech. I said, The very sight of you left me bereft of all power, filled my soul with alarm and panic, and deprived my thinking of its former logic. Such weakness did I experience from the fear as to deprive me even of the ability to breathe air in the usual way; so how shall I manage either to understand what is said by you or make an appropriate reply?

Now, let no one think that the one seen was the Lord from Daniel's calling him lord: he himself says at the end of the vision, "Raising his hands to heaven, he swore by the living Lord,"²⁵⁴ dutifully confessing his condition as servant. So by lord he is not speaking of him as God, but paying him due respect; in speaking with people of more honorable status we normally use this title, as blessed Abraham did on seeing angels as men and addressing them as men, "I beg you, lord, if I have found favor in your sight, not to pass by your servant"; and blessed Rebekah said to the servant of blessed Abraham, “Drink, lord, and I shall water your camels.”²⁵⁵ So here, too, lord does not mean the God of all; we shall learn this more clearly from the conclusion, but for the time being let us keep to the sequence of the story.

A further one in human form came and touched me, strengthened me, and said to me, Do not fear, man of desires, peace be with you, be brave and strong (v. 18), that is, Do not be anxious: I have come, not to harm you, but to inform you | of what you desired 1501 to learn; so cast off your fear, be brave and strong. And action followed word: When he spoke to me, I grew strong, and said, Let my lord speak, because you have strengthened me. He replied, Do you not know why I have come to you? I shall now return to fight against the leader of the Persians; I went off, and the leader of the Greeks came. But I shall announce to you what is set down in the book of truth; there is no one with me to resist them except Michael your leader (vv. 19–21): why mention one or two, the leader of the Persians and of the Greeks? None of the heavenly powers wants your people to receive any good—the result of their lawlessness, clearly—except Michael alone, who has been entrusted with your care. He used fight in the sense of converse with and persuade, intending to bring out one person’s justifiable annoyance with the people and the other’s benevolence toward them. Now, the one talking was probably holy Gabriel, he being the one who had also previously interpreted the other revelations for him.²⁵⁶

In the first year of Cyrus I rose to give power and strength (v. 1): as soon as Cyrus came to the throne, and the end of the captivity had been reached, I took my place until I had secured release and liberation for the people. I shall now announce the truth to you (v. 2): I am telling you in truth what will happen. Lo, a further three kings will arise in Persia. Cambyses was king after Cyrus; the soothsayers succeeded him and ruled for ten months, and after them

²⁵⁵ Gen 18:3; 24:46, where it is rather Abraham’s servant whom Rebekah addresses.

Λέγει τοίνυν, ὅτι οἱ μετ' αὐτὸν βασιλεύσοντες οὐδὲν ἐοικότες ὀφθήσονται τῷ Ἀλεξάνδρῳ, οὔτε κατὰ τὴν ῥώμην, οὔτε κατὰ τὴν ἐξουσίαν, ἣν ἐν τοῖς ἔτεσι τοῖς τελευταίοις ἐκτήσατο. Τοῦτο γὰρ λέγει· «Εἰς τὰ ἔσχατα αὐτοῦ, οὐδὲ κατὰ τὴν κυρείαν αὐτοῦ, ἣν ἐκυρίευσεν. Ὅτι ἐκτιλήσεται ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ, καὶ δοθήσεται ἑτέροις ἐκτὸς τούτων.» Οὐ μόνον γὰρ, φησὶν, εἰς τούτους τέσσαρας διαιρεθήσεται, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἑτέροις χωρὶς τούτων δοθήσεται. Ἐπὶ γὰρ τούτων καὶ Ἀρσάκης ὁ Πέρσης πολέμῳ κρατήσας ἀνεδήσατο τὴν βασιλείαν, καὶ μέρος τι τῆς Περσικῆς ἀρχῆς ἀνεκτήσατο· ἐξ οὗ μέχρι τοῦ παρόντος οἱ Περσῶν βασιλεῖς Ἀρσακίδαι προσαγορεύονται, τῶν προτέρων οὐκ Ἀρσακιδῶν, ἀλλὰ Ἀχαιμενιδῶν ὀνομαζομένων. Καὶ Ῥωμαῖοι δέ, τῆς Μακεδονικῆς διαιρεθείσης βασιλείας, μείζονα ἔσχον τὴν ἰσχύν, ἀμέλει καὶ παρ' αὐτῶν

Darius son of Hystaspes. The fourth will be much richer than all the others—a reference to Xerxes, son of Darius. After gaining control of the wealth, he will invade all the kingdoms of the Greeks. Historians with a different purpose from ours, annalists, rhetoricians, and orators remember this man and recount his ambitious campaigning and ridiculous retreat.²⁵⁷

Having in summary form informed us of Persian affairs as far as this man, he passes over the kings reigning after him as proving weaker, and transfers his attention to the Macedonian as follows. A powerful king will arise, and will rule with a strong rule and do what he wishes. When his kingdom comes to a standstill, it will be broken up and divided to the four winds of heaven (vv. 3–4). After Alexander had acquired the whole world, so to say, as his kingdom, as I remarked before, and then | met the common end of human beings, the kingdom was divided into four, as we have already often remarked. Here, too, the divine archangel said in turn, It will be divided into the four winds of heaven, and not to its extremities nor according to the rule with which it ruled. What he means is something like this: Alexander ruled for twelve years in all, in the six last years overthrowing the kingdom of the Persians and the Egyptians, and bringing all the nations in the middle into subjection. So he means that those reigning after him would be seen as in no way similar to Alexander either in strength or in the authority he acquired in his last years. It says as much, in fact, To its extremities nor according to the rule with which it ruled, because his kingdom will be plucked up and given to others besides these: it will not only be divided into these four, but will also be given to others beyond them. In their time, in fact, Arsaces the Persian gained control of the empire in war and attached it to himself, and recovered part of the Persian rule; from then until the present day the Persian kings are called Arsacid, though the former ones were called not Arsacid but Achaemenid.²⁵⁸ With the division of the Macedonian Empire,

²⁵⁷ Theodoret makes a reasonable estimate of the identity of these kings, as he had referred to them in connection with the “wings” (Aramaic “tusks”) of the beast in 7:5, though the Bible seems to know only of Cyrus, Ahasuerus (Xerxes), Artaxerxes, and “Darius the Persian” as Persian kings. He admits that his purpose in finding an historical basis for the prophecy is not that of secular historians.

τούτων τῶν βασιλέων δασμὸν ἐκομίζοντο. Οὕτω τὴν διαίρεσιν προμηνύσας, τῶν μὲν δύο βασιλέων καταλιμπάνει τὴν μνήμην· οὔτε γὰρ ὁ τῆς Ἀσίας, οὔτε ὁ τῆς Μακεδονίας, ἐπὶ πολὺν διήρκεσαν χρόνον· ἄλλως τε δὲ οὔτε συνέβη τι λυπηρῶν διὰ τούτων Ἰουδαίοις. Μόνον οὖν τῶν δύο μέμνηται, δι' ὧν τῶν χαλεπῶν συμφορῶν ἐπειράθησαν Ἰουδαῖοι. Οὗτοι δὲ εἰσιν, ὃ τε τῆς Αἰγύπτου βασιλεύς, καὶ ὁ τῶν πρὸς ἑω κειμένων ἐθνῶν τὴν ἀρχὴν πεπιστευμένος· εἶχον δὲ τὰ βασίλεια ἐν τε Ἀντιοχείᾳ καὶ Βαβυλῶνι. Προσῆκει δὲ πρότερον ἡμᾶς τῶν ῥηθησομένων εἰπεῖν τὴν ὑπόθεσιν, εἴθ' οὕτως τῆς κατὰ μέρος ἐρμηνείας ἄψασθαι. Ὁ τράγος, ὃν ὁ μακάριος εἶδε Δανιήλ, μετὰ τὴν συντριβὴν τοῦ ἐνὸς κέρατος, «τέσσαρα ἐβλάστησε κέρατα» τούτους αὐτοὺς τοὺς βασιλέας· «ἐκ τοῦ ἐνὸς αὐτῶν ἕτερον ἔφυ κέρας,» ὃ τὴν τε Αἴγυπτον σφόδρα κατεπολέμησε, καὶ μυρίαὶς συμφοραῖς τὸ Ἰουδαίων περιέβαλεν ἔθνος· σημαίνεται δὲ διὰ τούτου τοῦ κέρατος Ἀντίοχος ὁ Ἐπιφανής. Καὶ τὸ τέταρτον δὲ θηρίον ὁ μακάριος εἶδε Δανιήλ, δέκα κέρατα ἐσχηκέναι, καὶ μεταξὺ τῶν κεράτων μικρὸν κέρας ἀνέβαινεν, ὀφθαλμοὺς ἔχον, καὶ στόμα λαλοῦν μέγала, καὶ ἐποίει πόλεμον μετὰ τῶν ἀγίων. Πάλιν δὲ διὰ τούτων μαυθάνομεν, ὡς ἐν τῷ τέλει τῆς Ῥωμαϊκῆς βασιλείας δέκα κατ' αὐτὸν ἀναστήσονται βασιλεῖς, πολλὰ κατ' ἀλλήλων ἐργαζόμενοι κακά, καὶ τὰς ἀλλήλων καταγωνιζόμενοι βασιλείας, ὃν τρόπον οἱ Μακεδόνες διετέλουν ποιοῦντες· καὶ | ὅτι τούτων οὕτω γινομένων, φανήσεται ὁ ἄνθρωπος τῆς ἀμαρτίας, ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, τουτέστιν ὁ Ἀντίχριστος. Ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν ἔοικε τῆς Ῥωμαίων βασιλείας τὰ τέλη τῇ διαιρέσει τῆς Μακεδονικῆς βασιλείας, τὰ ὑπὸ τούτων κἀκείνων γενησόμενα κατὰ ταῦτόν ὁ μακάριος διδάσκεται Δανιήλ. the Romans became dominant, and of course they collected tribute from these same kings.

Having thus referred to the division, he omits mention of two of the kings, neither one lasting long, the one of Asia and the one of Macedonia, bringing no troubles to Jews, either. So he mentions only the two who were the cause of Jews suffering harsh calamities, namely, the king of Egypt and the one entrusted with the rule of the nations to the east, who had palaces in Antioch and Babylon.²⁵⁹ Now, we should first state the theme of what is to be told us, and then commence detailed commentary. The “goat” that blessed Daniel saw after the smashing of the one horn produced these same kings as four horns; from one of them another horn grew, which made heavy attacks on Egypt and invested the Jewish nation with countless calamities, the reference in this horn being Antiochus Epiphanes.²⁶⁰ The “fourth beast” that blessed Daniel saw had ten horns, and between the horns a little horn sprang up, with eyes and a mouth speaking lofty words, and it made war on the holy ones. We learn from this in turn that at the end of the Roman Empire ten kings will arise at the one time, wreaking many troubles on one another, the kingdoms contesting with one another in the way the Macedonians continued doing; and | when this happens, the sinful one will appear, the son of perdition, that is, the antichrist.²⁶¹ Since the ends of the Roman Empire resemble the division of the Macedonian Empire, blessed Daniel learns at the one time of what will be done by the one and the other: some of what will be said applies to the Macedonians, some to the ten horns that are coming and to the one springing up between them.

leading to the unsuccessful action against him in 140 by the Median king Demetrius recorded in 1 Macc 14:1–3. Cyrus, on the other hand, was from the Achaemenid dynasty.

²⁵⁹ Ptolemy I Soter (323–285) and Seleucus I Nicator (312–280), the latter at first a general of Ptolemy’s, but later absorbing much of the territory of Antigonos Cyclops, including Syria and Palestine. Hence the nomination by modern commentators of Ptolemy and Seleucus as the two characters mentioned in 11:5, pace Theodoret.

²⁶⁰ Antiochus IV Epiphanes (175–164) belonging to the Seleucid dynasty, as Theodoret explained in his commentary on chapter 8.

ὅτι ταῦθ' οὕτως ἔχει, ἐξ αὐτῆς μαθησόμεθα τῆς προφητείας. Προσθήκει τοίνυν ἡμᾶς μετὰ πάσης προσέχειν ἀκριβείας, καὶ διαιρεῖν προσφόρως τὰ τε τούτοις, τὰ τε ἐκείνοις ἀρμόττοντα. Ἐχομεν δὲ τούτου παράδειγμα τὴν εὐαγγελικὴν διδασκαλίαν. Καὶ γὰρ τοῦ Κυρίου τοῦ ναοῦ τοῦ ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις εἰρηκότος τοῖς ἀποστόλοις· «Ἀμὴν, ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐ μὴ μείνη ὧδε λίθος ἐπὶ λίθον, ὃς οὐ μὴ καταλυθῇ,» εἶτα ἐκείνων ἐρομένων· «Πότε ταῦτα ἔσται, καὶ τί τὸ σημεῖον τῆς σῆς παρουσίας;» Καὶ διπλὴν ἐρώτησιν προσαγαγόντων, ὁ Κύριος ἀναμῖξ ποιεῖται τὴν ἀπόκρισιν, κατὰ ταῦτόν λέγων τὰ τε τοῖς Ἱεροσολύμοις συμβησόμενα, καὶ τὰ κατὰ τὸν τῆς συντελείας καιρὸν γενησόμενα. Οἱ δὲ τὰ θεῖα μεμνημένοι διαιροῦσιν εὐκρινῶς τὰ τε τούτοις, τὰ τε ἐκείνοις ἀρμόττοντα τοῖς καιροῖς. Τοῦτο τοιγαροῦν καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐνταῦθα μετὰ τῆς προσηκούσης ποιήσομεν ἀποδείξεως. Διδάξας τοίνυν τὸν μακάριον Δανιὴλ ὁ προσδιαλεγόμενος, ὅτι τετραχῇ διαιρεθήσεται ἡ βασιλεία, καὶ τοὺς δύο καταλιπὼν, τὸν τε τῆς Μακεδονίας φημί, καὶ τὸν τῆς Ἀσίας, ἥτοι τοῦ Ἑλλησπόντου, ὡς καὶ πρὸς βραχὺν διαρκέσαντας χρόνον, καὶ Ἰουδαίους ἡκιστα λελυπηκότας, ἐπάγει·

ε'. «Καὶ ἐνίσχυσεν ὁ βασιλεὺς τοῦ Νότου, καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀρχόντων αὐτοῦ εἰς ἐνισχύσει ἐπ' αὐτόν, καὶ κυριεύσει κυρείαν πολλὴν ἐκτὸς ἐξουσίας αὐτοῦ.» Πτολεμαῖον δὲ λέγει τὸν Φιλοπάτορα, μὴ ἀρκεσθέντα τῇ τῆς Αἰγύπτου βασιλείᾳ, ἀλλὰ καὶ Φοινίκην, καὶ Σαμάρειαν, καὶ τὴν Ἰουδαίαν προσλαβόντα. Ἐνα δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀρχόντων αὐτοῦ ἐνισχύοντα τὸν Σκοπᾶν λέγει, οὗ καὶ ὁ Ἰώσηππος ὁ Ἑβραῖος μέμνηται συγγραφεύς, ὃς ἄριστα στρατηγήσας, πολλὰ τῶν ἔξω τῆς τοῦ Πτολεμαίου βασιλείας τῷ Πτολεμαίῳ ὑπέταξε. Τοῦτο αἰνιττόμενος λέγει· «Καὶ κυριεύσει κυρείαν πολλὴν ἐκτὸς ἐξουσίας αὐτοῦ,» τουτέστι, κρατήσῃ ἐθνῶν πολλῶν ἔξω τῆς ἀφωρισμένης αὐτῷ ἐξουσίας ὄντων.

ς'. «Καὶ μετὰ τὰ ἔτη αὐτοῦ συμμιγήσονται, καὶ θυγάτηρ τοῦ βασιλέως τοῦ Νότου εἰσελεύσεται πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα τοῦ Βορρᾶ, τοῦ ποιῆσαι συνθήκας μετ' αὐτοῦ.» Μετὰ τὴν τοῦ Φιλοπάτορος Πτολεμαίου τελευτὴν ἐβασίλευσε Πτολεμαῖος ὁ υἱὸς αὐτοῦ, ὁ Ἐπιφανὴς προσαγορευόμενος. Τοῦτο οὖν λέγει, ὅτι «Μετὰ τὰ ἔτη αὐτοῦ συμμιγήσονται,» καὶ διδάσκων, πῶς συμμιγήσονται· «Θυγάτηρ, φησί, τοῦ βασιλέως τοῦ Νότου εἰσελεύσεται πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα | τοῦ βορρᾶ, τοῦ ποιῆσαι συνθήκας μετ'

That fact that this is so we shall learn from the prophecy itself.

We should therefore attend with complete precision, and assign appropriately some things to one group and some to the other. We have the evangelical teaching as a model in this with the Lord's saying to the apostles about the temple in Jerusalem, "Amen, amen, I say to you, no stone here will remain on another without being destroyed," and their then replying, "How will this be, and what will be the sign of your coming?" When they asked this double question, the Lord gave a twofold reply, saying at the one time what would befall Jerusalem and what would happen at the end-time. Initiates into divine realities, however, astutely distinguish between what applies to the former time and what applies to the latter.²⁶² We, too, in this case shall also act accordingly with the appropriate demonstration.

Having informed blessed Daniel, then, that the empire will be divided into four, and leaving two aside—namely, the kings of Macedonia and of Asia, or the Hellespont—as lasting only a short time and causing least harm to Jews, his interlocutor goes on, The king of the south grew strong, and one of his leaders will grow stronger than he, and will rule with a greater rule than his (v. 5). He is referring to Ptolemy Philopator,²⁶³ who was not content with the kingdom of Egypt and took possession of Phoenicia, Samaria, and Judea. By the one of his leaders growing strong he refers to Scopas, mentioned also by Josephus the Hebrew historian,²⁶⁴ who proved an excellent general and subjected to Ptolemy much of what lay beyond Ptolemy's kingdom (suggested by he will rule with a greater rule than his, that is, he will gain control of many nations beyond his assigned jurisdiction). After his years they will be merged, and a daughter of the king of the south will come to the king of the north to make a treaty with him (v. 6). After the death of Ptolemy Philopator his son Ptolemy, called Epiphanes, came to the throne, as the text says, After his years they will be merged, mentioning also how they would be merged: A daughter of the king of the south will come to the king | of the north to make a treaty with him. By a king of 1508

Καὶ τοῦτο δὲ ἡμᾶς ἢ τρίτῃ τῶν Μακκαβαίων ἐδίδασκε βίβλος. Νενικηκῶς γὰρ παρ' ἐλπίδα πᾶσαν Ἀντίοχον τὸν Μέγαν ὁ Πτολεμαῖος, ἀφίκετο μὲν εἰς τὰ Ἱεροσόλυμα, προσενήνοχε δὲ τῷ Θεῷ θυσίας πολυτελεῖς· πειραθεὶς δὲ τῶν ἀδύτων ἐπιβῆναι τοῦ ναοῦ, καὶ τοῖς ἱερεῦσι μεθ' ἱκετείας ἀπείργουσιν, εἰξαι μὴ βουληθεὶς, μαστιγοῦται μὲν μάστιξιν ἀοράτοις· ἀπειλήσας δὲ τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις καταλαμβάνει τὴν Ἀλεξάνδρειαν, καὶ ποιεῖν ἐκεῖνα ἐπιχειρεῖ, ἃ ἡ ἱστορία διδάσκει. Τοῦτο καὶ ἡ προφητεία προλέγει. «Ἦξει, φησί, πρὸς τὴν δύναμιν, καὶ εἰσελεύσεται εἰς τὰ ὑποστηρίγματα τοῦ βασιλέως τοῦ Βορρά, καὶ ποιήσῃ ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ κατισχύσει.» Ὑποστηρίγματα δὲ

the north he refers to Antiochus, not Epiphanes but the one called Great, father of Antiochus Epiphanes, a contemporary of those Ptolemies.²⁶⁵ The strength of her arm will not prevail, her offspring will not stand, and she will be surrendered along with her attendants, her daughter and the one supporting her in those times: there will be a marriage, but they will not be together for long; instead, she will be given back to the one sending her through those who brought her, along with what was offered to her (the meaning of the one supporting her in those times, wealth being responsible for the strong and desirable marriage).

There will rise up from the flower out of her root for his preparation (v. 7), that is, she will be given back to her parent, but will give birth to a king who will oppose the kingdom of the one who gave her. He will come to the power. By power he refers to Jerusalem as enjoying divine grace and giving evidence of divine power in the marvels happening opportunely. Now, the third book of the Maccabees informed us of this:²⁶⁶ against all expectations Ptolemy defeated Antiochus the Great, reached Jerusalem, and offered lavish sacrifices to God; but on attempting to enter the precincts of the temple, and refusing to yield to the priests, who resisted him with remonstrances, he was scourged with invisible scourges. Uttering threats against the Jews, he returned to Alexandria, and set about doing the things of which history informs us. This is what the inspired text foretells, He will come to the power and will enter the fortresses of the king of the north; he will take action in them

²⁶⁵ Having passed over a couple of generations of the Greek rulers so as to bring the Romans into the picture, Theodoret has forfeited the likely scenario of earlier events recounted in the following verses, summarized by Di Lella, "Daniel," 419, as follows: "In ca. 250, Ptolemy II Philadelphus (285–246) gave his daughter Bernice in marriage to Antiochus II Theos (261–246). But the latter's divorced wife Laodice eventually had not only Antiochus II Theos but also Bernice and her infant son, with their Egyptian entourage, put to death. In revenge for these crimes, Bernice's brother Ptolemy III Euergetes (246–221), invaded Syria, put Laodice to death, defeated Laodice's son Seleucus II Callinicus (246–226), devastated the land, and carried off enormous booty to Egypt. In 242–240, Seleucus II undertook a counteroffensive against Egypt but failed miserably."

and prevail, by fortresses referring to the cities providing him with tribute, this being the way the provision of taxes, through which military might is sustained, reinforces and supports the kingdom.

Even their gods along with their graven images, every precious vessel of theirs of silver and gold he will carry off to Egypt as booty, and he shall stand over the king of the north (v. 8). In the first and second encounter the Ptolemies were victorious, as history records. Josephus also says this: “When Antiochus the Great was ruling Asia, the Jews in fact suffered severe hardship, their country devastated, as well as the inhabitants of Coele Syria. In fact, when he was warring against Ptolemy Philopator and his son Ptolemy | called Epiphanes, their fate was to suffer difficulties, the same fate whether he won or lost.” And shortly afterward, “When Antiochus defeated Ptolemy, he naturally occupied Judea. On the death of Philopator, his son sent a great force with Scopas as general against those in Coele Syria, taking many of their cities and our nation, which came under attack and was occupied by him. Not long afterwards Antiochus defeated Scopas after engaging him near the source of the Jordan, and destroyed much of his army. Later, when Antiochus had subjugated the cities in Palestine that Scopas had occupied and also Samaria, Jews willingly joined him, welcoming him into the city and providing abundant supplies to his army and elephants; and they enthusiastically helped the guards left by Scopas in the Jerusalem citadel when he mounted his siege.” In case I prolong the account excessively by narrating other events as well, I refer an interested reader to them.²⁶⁷

He will enter the kingdom of the king of the north, and will return to his own land. His sons will assemble a mass of numerous forces (vv. 9–10), by his sons referring to those entrusted with military affairs, like “sons of men” for men, and “sons of the prophets” for prophets, this being an idiom of the Hebrew language.²⁶⁸ It will ²⁶⁷ A lengthy citation from Josephus (Ant. 12.129–130, 131–133), which does not bear closely on the text of Daniel. Theodoret thinks some of his readers may be able to access Josephus. His own major historical work comes later in his career.

²⁶⁸ Theodoret’s version of events in the Greek kingdoms does not envisage action by sons of a Ptolemy, so he takes refuge in a “Hebrew idiom.” Had he not been so keen to get to the Romans, however, he might have thought of the sons of Seleucus II, by name Seleucus III Soter (226–223) and Antiochus III the Great (223–187). come and go, inundating everything, that is, carried in a flood and destroying everything like an inundation. It will pass through, settle down and engage with his strength, that is, using all resources he will advance against Egypt, eagerly set camp, and move the war to another location. He continues in this vein, The king of the south will be enraged and will sally forth, do battle with the king of the north, set up a mighty force, and the force will be delivered into his hand. He will capture the mighty force, his heart will be uplifted, he will overthrow countless numbers, and he will not prevail (vv. 11–12): when the king of the south deploys a vast number, Antiochus will prevail, will take the force captive, as victor will show signs of arrogance, and slay countless numbers. Yet he will not get the better of Egypt, nor gain control of the kingdom of Ptolemy.

For this reason he will in turn be displeased. The king of the north will return, will lead a force larger than before, and at the end of the times he will even penetrate with great might and much substance (v. 13): he will again | assemble an army greater than before and advance on Egypt, doing so at the end of his reign (the meaning of and at the end of the times he will even penetrate with great might and much substance). It is a case here of Hebrew repetition: he meant that he will make a considerable advance; it is an idiom in Hebrew and Syriac, both peoples in the habit of saying, Entering he will enter, Leaving he left, Eating he eats, and similarly many other such phrases. Accordingly, the interpreters employed greater precision and followed the Hebrew idioms.²⁶⁹ 1512

In those times many will rebel against the king of the south (v. 14), Antiochus thus vying with Ptolemy, the result being that the neighboring peoples then also showed scorn for him in his weakness. The children of pestilence among your people will be lifted up to confirm the vision, and they will be lifted up and will be weak. Here again by children of pestilence he referred to pests: those with wicked and depraved habits, choosing to live a life of godlessness defeated Antiochus III, who in turn defeated Ptolemy V Epiphanes in Palestine in 202–198.

²⁶⁹ This time Theodoret does not invoke Hebrew parlance for the purposes of eisegesis, instead noting the duplication of adverbial phrases and verbal circumlocution (lit. “he will enter entrances”). It is a pattern that he is familiar with in Syriac and that can easily be verified in the Hebrew text in this case, and he congratulates “the interpreters” for their efforts to replicate it (though only Theodotion does so).

rather than piety, will try through these kings to overturn worship according to the law and will not succeed; the kings were less impious, and continued cultivating the Jewish nation. The king of the north will come and construct siege works, and will take fortified cities (v. 15), that is, he will use siege works and mounds and siege engines. The arms of the king of the south will not endure, that is, he will be bereft of all power. His elite will not resist, and will have no strength to hold firm: there will be no use assembling his champions.

The one invading in opposition to him will do what he wishes, and there will be no one to stand up to him (v. 16): with his inability to make a fight of it, it will be easy for anyone in future to scorn him and prevail over the adversaries. He will make a stand in the land of Sabeir. Some of the manuscripts have “in the land of Sabeim,” while some of those turning the Hebrew term into Greek refer to the land of Sabeir as the “land of choice,” the meaning being the land of promise, which is that of choice, and Mount Sion, which God loved and in which he was pleased to dwell. “Sabeim,” on the other hand, means “power.” In any case, whether Judea is called land of good pleasure or land of power (in fact, he called it power above, and here Sabeim or Sabeir), the king of the north will come into this land as well.²⁷⁰ | It will be completed by his hand, that is, 1513 it will prosper in his ways, Josephus also in his account informing us likewise that the Jews spontaneously accepted Antiochus and were held in high esteem by him.²⁷¹

He will set himself to enter with the force of his entire kingdom (v. 17): he will endeavor to make his own the entire kingdom of the king of the South. He will put everything on a level footing with him: he will return to him all he has seized. He will give him a daughter of women to destroy her, but she will not stay, and will not be his. What he said obscurely above he says clearly here: He will give him his own daughter as his wife, but before long she will be returned to the giver, and the union will be dissolved.²⁷² Having treated Egypt in this fashion, he says, He will set himself in the direction of the islands, and will capture many and bring to an end the rulers of his mockery; but his mockery will return to him (v. 18): after bringing many of the islands into subjection, and ending the rule of their princes, he made them objects of ridicule. But he, too, will experience this mockery: Romans engaged him at Thermopylae, put an end to his audacity, imposed on him a tribute of a thousand talents, forced him to pay it every year, took his son Antiochus surnamed Epiphanes as a hostage and held him in Rome.²⁷³ The first book of the Maccabees also informs us of this: after writing of those who inherited the kingdom of Alexander, the chronicler went on, “From them issued forth a sinful root, Antiochus Epiphanes, son of King Antiochus, who had been a hostage in Rome.”²⁷⁴ To foreshadow this to Daniel, the one speaking to him said But he will bring his mockery back on him.

He goes on in the same vein, He will set himself to prevail over his land (v. 19): after conducting these operations in the islands, he will return to his own kingdom. He will be weak and will fall, and will not be found. There shall rise up from his root a plant of empire, making the transfer for his preparation (vv. 19–20). It refers to Antiochus Epiphanes, who on return from Rome succeeded his brother Seleucus; Seleucus, called Philopator, was the successor of Antiochus the Great, being his son, and at his death Antiochus Epiphanes took over the kingdom. In reference to him the text says There shall rise up from his root a plant of empire, making the transfer for his preparation, that is, imitating the rule of his father | and capable of gaining possession of the kingdom prepared by him. To suggest as much he went on, and bringing about the glory of kingship, that is, exercising extreme vigor. In those days they will 1516 be broken, and not personally or in battle: he will prove capable of terrorizing everyone and subjecting them to himself by his reputation alone and without bloodshed.

²⁷² A reference to the marriage of Cleopatra, daughter of Antiochus III, to Ptolemy V.

²⁷³ Though Antiochus III was in fact defeated by the Romans at Thermopylae, mention of “the islands” suggests rather his subsequent defeat by the Roman consul L. Cornelius Scipio at Magnesia in western Asia Minor in 190.

And he will stand in his preparation (v. 21): he will apply such force as even without engagement to gain control of the kingdom transmitted to him from his father. He was despised, and glory of kingship was not given to him: though being king, he was not in fact glorious, seeming instead to be an insignificant figure because under guard in Rome. But he will return with prosperity, and will gain control of kingship by underhand ways: though an object of extreme scorn, he will come in great affluence and immense power and will lay hold of kingship, thanks to guile and the use of deceit instead. Now, blessed Daniel beheld this also in the second vision, and heard the holy Gabriel saying, “Guile in his hand, and in his heart he will be magnified, he will destroy many and will be bent on the ruin of many;”²⁷⁵ here likewise He will gain control of kingship in underhand ways. The right arm of the inundator will be inundated before his face, and will be crushed (v. 22). Here again he hinted at the empire of the Egyptians, that though they too were very powerful, destroying their adversaries like an inundation, and rendering them totally undone, they themselves would be subject to an inundation from him and would be crushed—and not they alone but the prince of the covenant as well.

In the wake of associations with him he will employ trickery (v. 23). Here he suggests in advance the revolt against the high priest Onias by Joshua, also called Jason, and by Onias son of Menelaus. The former, Jason, had recourse to Antiochus and expelled his own brother from the high priesthood, while Menelaus, who had been sent to bring gifts and gold to Antiochus, transferred the high priesthood in turn to himself, and drove out Jason.²⁷⁶ From this ensued woes and severe misfortunes for the nation of Jews. Informed of this in advance, blessed Daniel hears that the right arm of the assailant will be assailed before him, a reference to Ptolemy Philometor, who succeeded Ptolemy Epiphanes.²⁷⁷ Proceeding in κε'. «Καὶ ἐξεγερθήσεται ἡ ἰσχὺς αὐτοῦ καὶ καρδία αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ βασιλέα τοῦ Νότου, ἐν δυνάμει μεγάλη.» Τάυτην αὐτοῦ τὴν κατὰ τῆς Αἰγύπτου ἔφοδον, καὶ ἡ πρώτη τῶν Μακκαβαίων διδάσκει ἱστορία. «Εἰσῆλθε γὰρ, φησὶν, Ἀντίοχος εἰς Αἴγυπτον ἐν ὄχλῳ βαρεῖ, καὶ ἐν ἄρμασι καὶ ἐλέφασιν, καὶ ἱππεῦσιν, καὶ ἐν στόλῳ μεγάλῳ, καὶ συνεστήσατο πόλεμον πρὸς Πτολεμαῖον βασιλέα Αἰγύπτου, καὶ ἐνετράπη Πτολεμαῖος ἀπὸ προσώπου αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἔφυγε, καὶ ἔπεσαν τραυματαῖα πολλοί, καὶ κατέλαβοντο τὰς πόλεις τὰς ὀχυράς ἐν γῇ Αἰγύπτου, καὶ ἔλαβον τὰ σκῦλα τῆς Αἰγύπτου.» Καὶ ταῦτα προδιδασκόμενος ὁ μακάριος Δανιὴλ ἤκουσε. «Καὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς τοῦ Νότου συνάψει πόλεμον πρὸς αὐτόν, ἐν δυνάμει μεγάλη καὶ ἰσχυρᾷ σφόδρα, καὶ οὐ στήσεται, ὅτι λογιῶνται ἐπ' αὐτὸν λογισμούς.» Ἀντὶ τοῦ, πολλαῖς καὶ παντοδαπαῖς ἐνέδραις χρήσονται κατ' αὐτοῦ.

this vein, he said the prince of the covenant as well, meaning the pious high priest, brother of Jason, and conveying in advance that he would deprive the latter of the priesthood. He next mentions the way: In the wake of associations with him he will employ trickery, | that is, he will use as ministers those who glory in being of the same race, and by the exercise of trickery he will bring countless troubles on the nation. 1517

He will rise up and prevail over him with a small nation: after deceiving the inhabitants of Jerusalem with the expressed intention of entering in peace, he first presumed to intrude into the precincts of the divine temple, then to remove everything adorning it and the vessels consecrated to divine worship, and so made his departure. At another time he advanced on the city and slaughtered eighty thousand people; not content even with that, he sent his generals and caused the death of countless others. To suggest as much in advance, he said, He will prevail over him with a small nation. And he will come in prosperity and in rich districts (vv. 23–24): it is not through insufficient resources that he comes with a few, but as a result of an arrogant attitude; he enjoys prosperity and access to countless rich nations supplying him with generous tribute. He will do what his fathers and the fathers of his fathers did not do, he will scatter booty and resources and spoils on them: whereas all his ancestors and all his predecessors showed respect for the nation of Jews, he did quite the opposite, carrying them off, plundering and enslaving them, and bestowing their possessions on his troops. He will direct his plans against Egypt, if only for a time, that is, he will not rule for long.

His strength and his heart will be aroused against the king of the south with great power (v. 25). This assault of his on Egypt the first account of the Maccabees also reports. “Antiochus entered Egypt with a strong force, with chariots, elephants, and cavalry, and with a large expedition. He did battle with Ptolemy king of Egypt, and routed Ptolemy before him; he fled, and many were wounded and fell. They occupied the fortified cities in the land of Egypt, and took spoils of Egypt.”²⁷⁸ Blessed Daniel was informed of this in advance on hearing The king of the south will engage him in battle, with great and exceedingly strong forces, and will not stand firm, because they will direct plans against him, that is, they will exercise many and varied wiles against him. And they will consume his necessities (v. 25–26), that is, they will dispose of all his revenue, and seizing tribute meant for him they will transfer it to themselves.

| They will crush him, and he will destroy his forces, and many will be wounded and fall: he will destroy like a deluge not only him but also his army, and will cause great slaughter. 1520

Both kings, their hearts intent on wickedness, will tell falsehoods at the one table, and it will not succeed (v. 27). Romans, as the historian Josephus informs us, learned of his campaign and ensured that he would leave Egypt;²⁷⁹ on this basis he made peace and shared Ptolemy's table. But the one speaking in advance to Daniel brings out the shallowness of the friendship in saying Both kings, their hearts intent on wickedness, will tell falsehoods at the one table, and it will not succeed, that is, the peace will not be lasting. Because in time it will still come to an end, that is once more, when this moment passes, they will deploy forces and engage. He will return to his own land with great resources (v. 28): nevertheless at that time he will go back to his own kingdom with great wealth and many possessions. His heart against the holy covenant: from that time he will have a single resolve, to undo the law given by God to the Jews. Being so resolved, he will also put his intentions into effect: He will do this and will return to his own land. Both the book of the Maccabees and the account of Josephus report this.

At the right time for him he will return, and he will come in the south, and the last will not be like the first (v. 29), that is, he will not conquer and prevail in similar fashion, but will return defeated. The right time for him means the time suitable for war. The advancing Kittim will come forward to him, and will be humbled (v. 30): assembling many Cypriots and other islanders (even to this day Kition is the city of Cyprus), he will make a raid on Egypt but will be defeated and go back humbled.²⁸⁰ He will retreat and will direct his rage on the holy covenant: all the anger ensuing from his defeat he will vent on the holy covenant. And to bring out its effect, He will do it: at his second coming he will cause much slaughter and the enslavement of the fugitives. He will retreat, and will pay heed to those who have forsaken the holy covenant: he will exercise complete care of transgressors and those who have rejected the way of Judaism, instead embracing the way of Hellenism.

Arms of his will rise up, defile the sanctuary of power, | interrupt the regular ritual, and give to it a desolate abomination (v. 31).¹⁵²¹ By arms, as we have already remarked,²⁸¹ he refers to the generals acting in his stead for the reason that they fulfill the king's commands like arms. So he is saying that he will dispatch some men to defile the sanctuary of power, that is, the temple consecrated to God Almighty and erect within an altar for idols (referring to it as desolate abomination). Now, the second book of Maccabees informs us of this as follows: "About this time Antiochus launched his second invasion of Egypt." Then, after inserting something to do with the rivalry between the illegitimate high priests, it went on, "When this came to the ears of the king, he presumed from what had occurred that Judea was in revolt. Hence he left Egypt with his spirit enraged and took the city captive, ordering his soldiers to cut down mercilessly those they met." After next recounting that the slaughter affected every age and the number of the dead reached eighty thousand, it shortly afterward went on to say, "Being very hostile to the Jews, Antiochus dispatched a hateful leader Apollonius with an army of twenty-two thousand, bidding him kill everyone of mature age." And shortly thereafter it says, "Not long afterward the king sent an Athenian elder to force the Jews to forsake the ancestral laws and not live by the laws of God, but rather to defile the temple in Jerusalem and give it the name of Olympian Zeus."²⁸²

The one speaking to blessed Daniel foretell this to him in the words, Arms of his will rise up, defile the sanctuary of power, and interrupt the regular ritual—that is, the worship daily offered to God—and transform to a desolate abomination the altar that the impious king erected to Zeus and on which he offered a pig. By underhand means they will seduce those violating the covenant (v. 32): by the use of deceptive words they will cause those guilty of transgression to be brazenly unfaithful. People who acknowledge their God will take courage and live up to it. He is referring here to those in the company of blessed Mattathias, who was the first to resist the decrees of Antiochus, and who with his sons occupied the wilderness and together with a few others went on the attack and opposed his generals. The wise members of the people will bring understanding to many things (v. 33): those who properly use the knowledge supplied them by God will utterly despise that fellow's laws, | and will prefer death for the divine law to a life of godless-ness. To suggest as much, he went on, They will fall to the sword, to flames, captivity, and robbery of their very life: the impious one employed all kinds of different punishments in an attempt to move the godly, inflicting on them untimely death and as it were robbing them of the remainder of their life.

He then forecasts what would be done by blessed Mattathias and his sons. In their weakness they will receive some little help (v. 34): they will receive divine grace, and for a time will prevail over their attackers, though they will not actually enjoy peace and relief from wars in their time. Hence he called the truce occurring in the middle of the wars some little help. Many who have lapsed will be joined to their number: observing this courage of theirs, many who have lapsed and denied their religion will undergo repentance and come to join them. Many of the wise will fail (v. 35): some of those who appear to be pious will take the opposite course. So that they may be purified, chosen, and cleansed until the end of time, for it is not yet time: this will not harm people yet to be; they will be instructed by this not to rely on former virtuous actions, but to be always in fear and trembling, according to the exhortation of blessed Paul, "If you seem to stand firm, be careful not to fall."²⁸³ The changes in the situation, you see, will as it were purify, test, and separate the dross from the true; they will have the same effect as the whitening of wool and testing whether its color is natural or artificial, whether the shade is innate throughout or applied to the surface alone. life, he is saying, in the time to come there will be a complete testing of people.

After these remarks in reference to Antiochus Epiphanes, he then moves from the image to the archetype, the archetype in the case of Antiochus being the antichrist, and the antichrist's image Antiochus. In other words, just as he forced Jews to commit impiety and live a lawless life, so the sinful one, the son of destruction, the one lifted up and exalted above every so-called god or object of worship, as blessed Paul says, so that he enters and takes his seat in God's temple, presenting himself as God, with all signs and false portents²⁸⁴—in this way he will do everything to deceive the godly, | at one time endeavoring to delude and cheat by deceptive wonder-working, at another by the use of force and application of every kind of punishment to the devotees of piety. If, on the other hand, on the basis of following the sequence of the work you do not believe this to be the case, take account of the Gospel teaching: there the Lord at the one time foretells the details of the end of everything and the details of the end of Jerusalem. After saying, remember, "Pray that your flight not be in winter or on the Sabbath" (something applicable to Jews alone), he went on, "For there will be great tribulation such as has not occurred from the beginning of the world up until now, nor will occur. If those days had not been shortened, no human being would be saved; but on account of the elect those days will be shortened." And to bring out that nothing of this applies to Jews, he went on, "If at that time someone says to you, Look, here is the Christ, or there he is, do not believe them." And after making some predictions about false messiahs, he goes on, "As the lightning comes out of the east and shines as far as the west, so too will the coming of the Son of Man be"²⁸⁵—and, without my being exhaustive, many other similar statements. 1525

Guided by this, then, let us also understand the work as moving from Antiochus to the antichrist, as from image to archetype, on the one hand, and on the other giving us clear information in advance about the former. The king will do as he pleases, he will be exalted and magnified over every god and over the God of gods, he will give voice to inflated ideas and will prosper (v. 36), that is,

he will enjoy success, but not finally: until the wrath is fulfilled, that is, until he inflames divine wrath and brings it on himself. By wrath he refers to retribution, the divinity not being subject to passion. For it reaches completion and zeal:²⁸⁶ aware in advance of his own end, he will exercise great zeal in summoning everyone to impiety, wanting to have many sharers in the retribution. What follows provides a clearer refutation of the folly of those who think this is said in reference to Antiochus: He will not understand about all his ancestors' gods (v. 37). We find, by contrast, Antiochus filling Jerusalem and all Judea with altars for the idols, sacrificing to Zeus in God's temple, calling the temple in Jerusalem after Olympian Zeus and the one on Mount Gerizim after Zeus Xenios. So how could it be that one so superstitious, so devoted to worship of the idols, will not understand about his ancestors' gods? Antiochus, in fact, kept doing the opposite in all respects: | while 1528 reverencing his ancestral gods he denied the God worshiped by the Jews. This is therefore applicable in no way to Antiochus but to the actual archetype of Antiochus, of whom Antiochus was image and type, striving to surpass all his predecessors in impiety. It is of the antichrist, therefore, that he says he will not understand about his ancestral gods, about the desire of women and about every god. This, too, is clearly contrary to Antiochus's practices: far from being content with lawfully wedded wives, by whom he had his sons Antiochus Eupator and Alexander, he also had relations with lascivious concubines. The second book of the Maccabees refers to one of these, the chronicler speaking in these terms: "It happened that the people of Tarsus and Mallus revolted because their city had been given as a present to Antiochis, the king's concubine."²⁸⁷ How could it be, then, that one in thrall to such extreme lasciviousness as to bestow such great cities on a courtesan will not understand the desire of women? In this case, too, those who attempt to take this in reference to Antiochus are therefore clearly proven to be wide of the mark.

For our part, however, let us resume where we left off. He will not pay heed to the desire of women and to every god, because he will be magnified over them all, that is, he will think himself the greatest of all. In his place he will glorify the god Maozeim, and a god his ancestors did not know he will glorify with silver and gold, precious stones and desirable things (v. 38): whereas all his ancestors acknowledged their natural limitations, and did not presume to name themselves as god over all things, he gives himself the title God mighty and strong (the sense of Maozeim)—hence his putting in his place, meaning himself.²⁸⁸ He will deal with fortresses of fugitives with a foreign god of whom he knew; he will magnify glory, subject many to them, and divide up the land as gifts (v. 39): he will erect temples to himself, adorn them with silver, gold, and precious stones, and subject many to them—namely, those deceived by the portents or suborned by punishments. He will also divide up the land as gifts: he will bestow a great deal of the land on those subjects who opted for godlessness.

²⁸⁶ The phrase "and zeal" in Theodoret's text is unsupported.

²⁸⁷ 2 Macc 4:30. Theodoret's logic here is not helped by his not detecting in the phrase in his Greek version, "the desire of women," a reference to the god Tammuz-Adonis (given its proper name in Ezek 8:14; cf. Theodoret's comment there).

At the end of the time the king of the south will engage him in battle, and the king of the north will mass his forces against him with chariots, | horsemen, and many ships, and he will enter the land with deluges and will crush them (v. 40). We have often remarked that the ten horns of the fourth beast which emerge against him refer to ten kings at the end of the Roman Empire who will reign at the same time. Of these in turn, then, the king of the south will make war on the one who is called king of the north; Scripture says, remember, “From the north, troubles will flare up against all the inhabitants of the land.”²⁸⁹ Now, Antiochus, who proved to be a type of this man, was given the name king of the north; so when the king of the south engaged him, he attacked him with vast numbers and military equipment on land and sea, and won the day. The Lord in the sacred Gospels also foretold these enemies, “Nation will rise up against nation, kingdom against kingdom, and there will be famine, pestilence, and earthquakes in various places; all this is the beginning of the birth-pangs.”²⁹⁰ So with the Lord’s ²⁸⁸ The Greek versions simply transliterate the Hebrew for “(god) of fortresses,” a probable reference to the Roman god Jupiter Capitolinus, equivalent to Olympian Zeus. Unaware of this, Theodoret rationalizes, encouraged by the connotation of divinity in the name Epiphanes.

²⁸⁹ Jer 1:14, a verse on which there is no remark in Theodoret’s Commentary on Jeremiah (at least in the form we have it). The “north” in question in Jeremiah is more likely Babylon.

prophecy corresponding to this prophecy, we shall be able to understand the verses before us.

He will pass through, he goes on. He will enter the land of Sabeir (v. 41), once again by Sabeir referring to Jerusalem.²⁹¹ And many will fail—namely, those deceived or influenced by the magnitude of the punishments. These shall be saved from his hand, Edom, Moab, and the main part of the children of Ammon. This does not apply to Antiochus, either: after vanquishing them, he set leaders over them, one of whom was Timothy, leader of the Ammonites. Now, under this impious fellow it is likely that those people escaped on the grounds of not being zealous in their religious practice; the impious fellow, remember, directed his attack totally against the zealous. If, on the other hand, these names ought be taken also in a figurative manner, Edom means the red one—hence Esau was called Edom for his longing for a dish of red lentils; blood is red in appearance, too, so those thought worthy of the Lord’s blood, and living a life worthy of this gift, have the grace of the Lord’s blood flourishing within them.²⁹² Moab means the one born of the father: Lot’s older daughter conceived of her father, then gave birth and gave the name to the child; so God’s children are referred to as “those born not of blood, or of the will of a man, or of the will of the flesh, but of God,” and hence are properly called Moab.²⁹³ Ammon means the son of the people, as the divine Scripture teaches: preaching in Athens blessed Paul said, “Since we are God’s people, we ought not think | the deity is like gold, silver or stone, an image formed by the skill and imagination of human beings.”²⁹⁴ And God himself referred to the saints as his people, “To give a drink to my chosen people, the people I

²⁹¹ Cf. note 270. What seems a reference to a successful campaign of Antiochus in Egypt is otherwise unknown, so Theodoret feels justified in making some creative commentary and allegorical and sacramental interpretation.

²⁹² Since the historical reference in these verses is not obvious, Theodoret thinks he may (pace Diodore) venture into allegorical interpretation on the basis of popular etymology, citing Gen 25:25 in reference to Esau’s coloring (as he does in his commentary also on Isa 63:1 and Song 3:6), and go further into eucharistic overtones.

²⁹³ Theodoret thinks that the popular etymology involved in the Gen 19:37–38 account of the naming of Lot’s daughters’ sons is confirmed by John 1:13.

formed to proclaim my marvels;”²⁹⁵ it is not unlikely, therefore, that he gave the name Ammon to those thought worthy of divine kinship by divine grace. If, then, you wish to take the names in a figurative fashion, take them that way; if, on the other hand, in historical fashion, as we have already said, the meaning is that he will scorn them on the grounds that most lived lives of impiety, while few of them, though religious, were not ardent in their attitude to divine things.

He will stretch out his hand over the land of Egypt, and the land of Egypt will have no escape. He will gain control of the treasures of gold and silver, of all desirable things of Egypt, Libya, and Ethiopia, and of all their fortresses (vv. 42–43). This least of all is applicable to Antiochus: he did not gain power over Libya, or Ethiopia, or Egypt itself; under orders from the Romans he turned back. So here there is reference to the three horns which the little horn overturned: three mighty nations, Egypt, Ethiopia, and Libya, probably under the control of three kings, he will overthrow and make subject to him. Reports and concerns from the east and the north will alarm him, and he will come with great anger to curse and deprive many (v. 44). This does not apply to Antiochus, either: it was not alarming reports that drove him from Egypt, but the Roman decree issuing from the west, not the east. In regard to this it says that he would take Egypt, Libya, and Ethiopia, make them subject to him, be alarmed by some report, turn back and come with great anger to curse and deprive many. Both terms give this meaning: deprive is to strip them of their piety, and curse is to declare them foreign to it.

He will pitch his tent in Apadanos between the seas on the holy mount of Sabeir (v. 45). We do not find this happening under Antiochus, either; otherwise, let them tell us what is this place where Antiochus pitched his tent situated between the two seas.²⁹⁶ But they will not be able to show us. None of these things, therefore, has been fulfilled; instead, they will all happen under humankind’s common enemy. Now, by Sabeir once again he refers to the land ²⁹⁶ The author’s vagueness in locating the death of the villain Theodoret exploits to his advantage to disqualify Antiochus (who in fact died in Persia in 164) and substitute the antichrist. Unaware that the Hebrew text is employing a rare Old Persian word for “palace,” he hazards a guess about the Ἀπαδανός in his text.

CHAPTER 12

At that time there will arise Michael the great leader, the one set over the children of your people (v. 1): the archangel entrusted with your care will rise up for assistance to those then under attack. This will also be made clear to the ignorant in another commentary: in the prophet Malachi God says to the Jews, “Lo, I shall send you Elijah the Tishbite before the arrival of the great and splendid day of the Lord, who will turn a father’s heart to his child and people’s heart to their neighbor lest I come and strike the land utterly.”²⁹⁸ His message to us is that when the antichrist commits these crimes, the mighty Elijah will appear, proclaiming to Jews the coming of the Lord, and will convert many (the meaning of “He will turn a father’s heart to his child”, that is, the Jews to the believers from nations, referring to the former as “fathers,” being older in knowledge). Hence he did not say, He will turn a child’s heart to his father, but “a father’s heart to his child:” he will attach to the church the Jew who has come to faith. And since the Jew is older in knowledge, whereas the nature of both groups is the same, he went on, “and people’s heart to their neighbor” to bring out that while the nature of both groups is the same, knowledge of God was given to Jews first. They proved disobedient, however, and were put last; but they found faith through the preaching of ²⁹⁸ Mal 4:5–6. The reason for quoting this reference to Elijah in one of the Twelve Prophets (he seems to be saying his commentary on them is “forthcoming,” as it was his next work but one) may be, as it was in commenting on that place in Malachi, to qualify the Jews’ monopoly on these eminent figures; non-Jewish members of the church also have a claim.

the mighty Elijah and were joined to the nations, who had grasped the salvation sent to them, and will form one church.

He suggests as much here, too, that when this is done by the antichrist, the holy Archangel Michael will do everything to ensure that Elijah comes and foretells the Lord's coming so that the Jews of that time will attain salvation. Then, to describe the extraordinary degree of the troubles which that impious one will bring about, he says, There will be a time of tribulation such as has not happened since the nation came on earth until that time. The Lord also said this in the sacred Gospels, "There will be tribulation such as has not happened from the beginning of the world, nor will it happen; | if those days had not been shortened, no human being would be saved; but for the sake of my elect I shall shorten those days."²⁹⁹ So the prophetic statements are consistent with the Gospel predictions. He continues in this vein, At that time all your people who are found recorded in the book will be saved, namely, those worthy of salvation, who will hearken to Elijah's preaching, and whom he foreknows from the first and the very beginning (calling God's knowledge a book). 1536

Many of those asleep in the dust of the earth will awaken, some to everlasting life and some to reproach and everlasting shame (v. 2). Let those endeavoring to apply this to Antiochus tell us who were resurrected in his time, some attaining everlasting life and some being rewarded with reproach and everlasting shame. If, on the other hand, they were to claim the Maccabees are indicated by this on the grounds of their leaving the caves, they would earn louder mockery since these will be found to be both lovers of piety and agents of impiety. The prophecy says, note, Many of those asleep in the dust of the earth will awaken, some to everlasting life and some to reproach and everlasting shame. And so if they were to take this to apply to the Maccabees, they would claim the Maccabees are both wicked and good, or some of them good and some evil. But it is not possible to establish this, either: the whole company of them is pious. Nor does eternal life apply to them in this world: all were slain and left this world.³⁰⁰ Let us therefore abandon those old wives' tales and discover in this text the common resurrection of the de-³⁰⁰ Likewise in discussing the reference in "the holy ones" in 7:27, Theodoret is ambiguous as to the claim of the Maccabees, denying that all of them were holy and then conceding that all were holy but still do not qualify.

parted and the judgment conducted after the resurrection: some of them will inherit eternal life, others will be objects of ridicule and reproach forever. Now, by many he meant everyone: blessed Paul used “many” in the sense of everyone when saying, “If many died through one person’s fall, much more did the grace of God and the free gift abound for many in the grace of one person Jesus Christ.”³⁰¹

Those with understanding will shine like the brightness of the firmament (v. 3). The Lord in the sacred Gospels also says, “The righteous will then shine like the sun.”³⁰² And some of the many righteous ones like the stars forever and ever: those approved and chosen will be comparable with the brightness of the firmament and the light of the sun itself, while some who are inferior to them (an implication of the term many) will resemble the beams of the stars, emitting this ray forever. Blessed Paul likewise also | differentiated between the ranks of the pious, “The sun’s glory is of one kind, the moon’s glory of another, the stars’ glory of another, star differing from star in glory.”³⁰³

After saying this, Daniel’s interlocutor went on, For your part, Daniel, keep the words closed up and seal the book until the time of consummation, until many are taught and knowledge is increased (v. 4): put seals of obscurity on the book, and ensure it is not clear to everyone, until knowledge is increased and the whole land filled with knowing the Lord, like deep water covering seas, as in the prophecy.³⁰⁴ The grace of the divine Spirit removed these seals after the coming of our Savior, and made clear to the believers what was obscure.

And I, Daniel, looked and, lo, two others stood there, one on this bank of the river and the other on the other bank. They said to the man clothed in linen, who was upstream, How long for the wonders you have spoken of and for their purification? (vv. 5–6) I stood by silently, he is saying, not daring to ask a question; but two others standing on either side of the river asked the person clad in fine linen moving on the surface of the water, For how long a time will these fearsome things that are full of terror be in force? when will come relief from them? I heard the man clad in linen who was upstream; he lifted his right hand and his left hand to heaven, and swore by the one who lives forever that it would be for a time, and times, and half a time (v. 7). From this we gain precise knowledge that the one speaking at that time was not the Lord: the Lord, since he had no one else to swear by, as the divine apostle says, swore by himself, “As I live, says the Lord;” and blessed Moses shows him saying, “I will lift up my hand to heaven and swear by my right hand and say, As I live forever.”³⁰⁵ This person, on the contrary, being one of those subject and well-disposed to the Lord, stretched out both his hands to heaven and swore by the one who lives forever. Now, Daniel, who witnessed this, says he had hands, whereas we know angels are by nature incorporeal, presenting a visible appearance for the benefit of the viewers; often, as an exercise of greater considerateness,³⁰⁶ they give the appearance of gentleness, often of inspiring fear to make the onlookers more zealous.

He swore by the one who lives forever, then, that it would be for a time, and times, and half a time. | It means three and a half years; 1540 the holy Gabriel said this was also the case with the horn waging war on the holy ones that would spring up after the ten horns at the end of the Roman Empire. After saying, remember, “He will humble three kings, he will speak words against the Most High, and will wear out the holy ones,” he went on, “It will be given into his hand for a time, and times, and half a time.”³⁰⁷ This amounts to three and a half years: he called a year a time, as we shall learn more clearly from what comes next: A time, and times, and half a time. When the scattering of the sanctified people comes to an end, they will know the holy one, and all this will come to an end, in other words, the scattering of the sanctified people will last three and a half years, and all this will come to an end. Then they will know the holy one, a reference to mighty Elijah: when mighty Elijah appears about the end of that person's reign, he will proclaim our Savior's second coming.

Blessed Daniel continues in the same vein. I heard and did not understand, and I said, Lord, what will be the outcome of these things? (v. 8) Not understanding what was said about the time, I was forced to ask in my longing to learn more clearly. I desired also to be informed of what would happen after that. He replied to me, Go your way, Daniel, because the words are closed up and sealed until the end of time. Until many are chosen, cleansed and purified, the lawless will break the law, all the godless will fail to understand, and the wise will have wisdom (vv. 9–10): it was not without purpose that I said this obscurely and have imposed obscurity on the words like seals, nor should divine things be presented to everyone indiscriminately. Rather, the wise will grasp them, thanks to the knowledge supplied them from on high, whereas those guilty of lawlessness and impiety will be unable to grasp any of the contents. When the events come to pass, however, they will gain a clear understanding of the prophecies about them; then, too, evildoers will be separated from the righteous, the furnace testing everything. This is what blessed Paul also said, “Each one's work will become visible, for the day will disclose it, because it will be made manifest by fire, and the fire will test what sort of work each has done.” Further, the Lord in the sacred Gospels speaks of the need not to present divine things to everyone indiscriminately: “Do not give holy things to dogs, nor cast your pearls before swine.”³⁰⁸

Blessed Daniel being a holy and devout servant of the Lord, the holy angel informs him of the time of the tyranny of the antichrist in the words, | From the time of the alteration in the daily ritual and the occurrence of the abomination of desolation, 1,290 days 1541 (v. 11). Since he had said a time, and times, and half a time, and had seen that blessed Daniel did not understand, he clarified it for him in his ignorance by transposing the time into days while still leaving the statement obscure for the others. By abomination of desolation he refers to the antichrist, and by alteration in the daily ritual the program of congregational worship interrupted and brought to an end by that person's insane frenzy. The divine angel continues in this vein: Blessed the one who perseveres and attains the 1,335 days (v. 12). He suggests and indicates that when this person sustains a heaven-sent blow, mighty Elijah will continue preaching for the remaining forty-five days, when the Lord will appear, coming in the clouds of heaven, and will crown those preserving intact the possession of endurance. The Lord also says this in the sacred Gospels, “The one who perseveres to the end will be saved.”³⁰⁹ It is also possible from this to gain a precise realization that none of these things applies to Antiochus: it said the calamity would last 2,300 days under him, but under the antichrist 1,290; so the difference in time confirms the difference in persons and events.³¹⁰

As for you, go your way and be at rest (v. 13): it is time for you to meet your end. There are still days for the completion of the end: no little time still remains of the period of the present life. Here he clearly informed us of the end, and that what was foretold would at that time come to pass. You will rest and rise up for your time (or more properly your inheritance, as is clear from what follows)³¹¹ to the end of days: you must now undergo the end common to all; but you will rise—and not simply rise but for your inheritance, that is, in the company of likeminded people. And to explain when, he went on, to the end of days. This is the way the divine archangel through blessed and thrice-blessed Daniel gave us clear teaching about the resurrection.

Having thus completed the revelation, the prophet continued, King Astyages was laid to rest with his ancestors, and Cyrus the Persian succeeded to his empire. Daniel was the king’s companion, of higher rank than all his friends (v. 14). Astyages was the maternal grandfather of Cyrus; on his death, with his son Cyaxares incapable of managing the empire, | Cyrus destroyed the empire of the Assyrians and Chaldeans, and transferred the power of the Medes to the Persians.³¹² Now, he was the king’s table companion and fa-

³¹⁰ Theodoret, who has had trouble following the numerical time references in chapters 7 and 8, is now quite confused, unable to recognize additions by two later editors in vv. 11–12 to extend arbitrarily the time of persecution once it became clear that 1,150 days (three and a half years) did not suffice.

³¹¹ Theodoret appears to be correcting a slip by a copyist who put καίρον for κληρον.

³¹² Theodoret’s text contains what is (unbeknown to him, evidently) the opening verse of the deuterocanonical story of Bel and the Dragon, also involving Daniel, again in Theodotion’s version from a Semitic original, though the miliar, the text says, and was ranked above all his acquaintances; enjoying this favor, he gave a glimpse of what had been prophesied of him by God through the prophet Isaiah and was responsible for the people's release being effected.

While we have come to this realization from the divine prophecy of Daniel, then, it is right for Jews to lament, having presumed to place this divine prophet outside the prophetic corpus, despite learning by experience the truth of the prophecy. After all, it is obvious that Jews of today add to their other impious acts the blasphemy of endeavoring by the denial of the prophecy to obscure the unambiguous testimony to the coming of our Savior. They stand to gain no further advantage from denying this prophecy: the other prophets confirm it, and the events themselves cry aloud that they correspond to the prophecies about him. Now, to the fact that the Jews of old used to call blessed Daniel the greatest prophet the Hebrew Josephus is a notable witness, who, while not accepting the Christian message, could not bring himself to conceal the truth. In the tenth book of the Jewish Antiquities, after saying many things about Daniel, he goes on to say this: "Everything was accorded him in surprising fashion as one of the greatest prophets, including esteem and glory for the length of his life by kings and populace. Now that he is dead, he has an immortal reputation: all the books that he wrote and left behind are read by us even now, and from them we have the belief that Daniel conversed with God. After all, he not only continued to prophesy the future like the other prophets but also specified the time when it would come to pass." And shortly after, "On the basis of the outcome of the prophecies he gains with the masses confidence in their accuracy and the impression of a divine quality"; and he continues saying countless other such things of him.³¹³ Likewise also in the twelfth book of the Antiquities he expresses himself in turn thus: "The devastation of the temple happened in accordance with the prophecy of Daniel, which was made 408 years before;

rest of the story and the further one of Susanna do not appear in his Bible, it would seem. Again, as in having to deal with the legendary "Darius the Mede" at the opening of chapter 6 (see note 132 there), he confuses the historical Cyaxares, king of the Medes in the seventh century and destroyer of Assyria, with this legendary figure.

he brought out that Macedonians would destroy it.”³¹⁴ Whereas Josephus gives this additional witness to the prophet, Jews by contrast, afflicted with utter shamelessness, have no respect even for their own teachers.

Let us for our part, on the other hand, I beseech you, accept the foreknowledge of the future as from God’s prophet and make ourselves ready for | that fearsome day, so that we may rise, not to everlasting shame, but to everlasting life. May it be the good fortune of us all to attain this, thanks to the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit be glory, now and forever, for ages of ages. Amen.³¹⁵
